HOIST FLAG ON BRITISH DUGOUT

Military Take Over Shataukok

Night has fallen, and, after hours of many excitements, alarms, and dangerous moments, it is possible to say that all is quiet along the border.

An atmosphere of tension reigns.

To what extent may be inferred from the fact that the military authorities have now taken full charge of the situation at Shataukok, with the police lying in reserve.

Reason for this is that Shataukok is now the one serious danger point.

THE LAST DITCH

Across the frontier lies the "last Chinese line of defence," waiting in prepared positions. For the moment, however, no Japanese troops are in close proximity and it is not expected that any operations will be commenced before dawn.

The most delicate and dangerous-looking incident occurred early in the afternoon when a small Japanese detachment crossed the Shumchun River into British territory and occupied a British military frontier post.

The post involved was a military observation dug-out post, No. 12, about two miles to the east of Shumchun bridge.

The Japanese were persuaded to return to Chinese territory after they had hoisted the Japanese flag over the position.

OFFICIAL VERSION

The official version of the incident states: "At about 12.30 p.m. to-day, a Japanese detachment were observed to be crossing the Shumchun River about two miles below the Shumchun bridge."

"They were seen to occupy a military dug-out, which is British military dug-out (No. 12) on the British side of the river."

"They hoisted the Japanese flag over the post."

"The detachment withdrew later after representations had been made."

FRONTIER ROAD CLOSED TO PUBLIC

The frontier road has been closed to the public, for reasons of policy and defence, until further notice.

An official notification to this effect was made to the "Sunday Herald" late last night by the Commissioner of Police, Hon. Mr. T. H. King, "to save possible 'sight-seeing' from disappointment."

HEAVY SHELLFIRE: THREE DIRECT HITS ON BRITISH POST

"Herald" Reporter In Thick Of Action

"GRANDSTAND" VIEW WHILE JAPANESE CAPTURE SHUMCHUN

(By N. A. E. MACKAY)

A GRANDSTAND SEAT AT AN EXHIBITION OF MODERN WARFARE BY THE JAPANESE; A NERVE-WRACKING THREE HOURS UNDER FIRE, AND A SITUATION WHICH VERY NEARLY GAVE ME A LEADING ROLE IN THE PERFORMANCE, WERE THE HIGHLIGHTS OF AN EVENTFUL DAY AS "WAR CORRESPONDENT ON THE SHUMCHUN FRONT" YESTERDAY.

Together with a section of the Middlesex Regiment and a detachment of police, I crouched in the splinter-proof frontier post a bare 15 yards from the Canton highway bridge, and watched the Japanese forces, comprised of artillery, cavalry and infantry, advance up the valley from east of our position and with text-book precision, in a series of well co-ordinated movements, carry their objective, the Shumchun Customs Wireless Station.

During the operation, the Japanese field battery concentrated artillery fire on the Shumchun River bridge. Three direct hits landed on No. 9 British observation-post and many shells fell in British territory.

Japanese Use Blimp

Observers near the British border yesterday were given an indication of the thoroughness with which the Japanese have equipped themselves for their "mopping-up" campaign. Shortly before noon an observation balloon was sent up in the vicinity of Shumchun. The blimp remained in position at about three thousand feet, until 4.30.

sent Chinese defenders helters-skelter to the barricade at Shataukok in an effort to cross into British Territory; sent several thousand more scrambling over the barbed wire entanglements at other unguarded sections of the border.

A sight to have gladdened a museum curator's heart was the pile of equipment and an assortment of arms that would not have been out of place on a battlefield of half-a-century ago.

ARMED CHINESE LOOSE IN TERRITORIES

If the information given me by an official at Shataukok, yesterday, is correct, there are a considerable number of armed Chinese running loose in British territory.

Some have been rounded up. The outbreak of machine-gun and rifle fire which, at dawn,

Pitiful Scenes Among Homeless Refugees

As dawn broke yesterday, the hills and valleys along the border presented a pitiful sight.

Shivering humanity crouched behind boulders and hundreds huddled in ravines to escape the chill wind.

Dazed with cold and lack of food, the pale light of early day showed faces from which hope had fled.

Passing them, a shuffling black coil, stretching as far as the eye could see, constantly added to the quota of misery.

Taking my place in the never-ending line, I trudged along on a Pilgrim's progress where every step was a lesson in man's inhumanity to man, and every mound a hill of despair.

The animals were better off than their masters. The pigs rode in sling between poles; the fowl in baskets; a man acted as the hind leg of an ox, the beast's limb dangling uselessly, broken at the fetlock.

Treasured possessions had a pathos that only the more favoured may recognise.

Certainly, the old woman who painfully manoeuvred a battered sewing machine, while her daughter, clutched a stained lithograph advertising Coca-Cola, were unconscious of it.

These two oddments were all that remained of home.

I arrived at Shumchun Bridge at 9.30 a.m. As I got out of the car, a Japanese plane flew low overhead dropping thousands of leaflets. One could see quite distinctly the crew scattering handfuls over the side.

On my way to the Bridge, I had observed an ever-increasing stream of refugees rushing in a panic-stricken manner, looking back anxiously over their shoulders to where a thick blanket of white smoke was rising lazily in the cold air.

Way in the east, while I had my glasses focussed in that direction, I saw a puff of white and heard a dull boom. Watching closer, I made out a Japanese field battery. They were wearing blue uniforms and I gathered that they were naval men.

A few minutes later, there was another explosion. I watched for the burst and sure enough, it came. There was a swishing sound and across the river, a bare 20 yards from a party of us, a puff of dust rose where a piece of shrapnel had imbedded itself.

Came a shrill screaming following by an ear-splitting roar from a hill about 20 yards over the border. Without waiting to observe damage, I dived ingloriously into the observation post.

From behind the fire-step, my glasses picked out the target. It was the Custom's Wireless Station, two great masts and a huddle of ramshackle buildings 400 feet up, and about that number of yards west of the post.

A shell whined overhead. Instinctively I ducked. When I looked up, a cloud of smoke and dust rising from the Wireless Station told me that the artillery were dead on. Another and then another shell found its objective.

This was interesting. The Japanese gunners were not so dull after all!

Behind Camp The shelling suddenly ceased, and I looked round the post. A Middlesex Tommy was tying up his boot-lace! A signaller was busy telephoning the record of hits to H.Q. Lance-Sergeant G. Davies, i/c police post, 20 yards back from our position, entered, followed by his men.

"A shell burst just behind the camp," he announced. We looked at each other; this was not going to be a grandstand seat after all!

Whole Post Shaken I offered a cigarette to the signaller, who, I noticed, was not smoking.

"No. 9 Post speaking—shell burst five yards left side of fire step: number—" a deafening crash obliterated his voice. The whole post rocked. When the dust cleared my eye caught a jagged piece of metal

The Governor's Personal Appeal

Government House, Nov. 26, 1938.

Dear Sir,

There are now some scores of thousands of homeless, destitute refugees from South China in the New Territories of this Colony and many more in and near Canton.

I hope, therefore, that all those in a position to do so who have not yet contributed to the local Fund for the Relief of Distress in China will hasten to give, and generously.

Contributions may be sent and cheques made payable to

Several Inches Of Snow In Yorkshire

London, Yesterday. Renewed gales in the Channel caused a delay in the departure of the train ferry from Dover early this morning, and in Plymouth the 1,118 tons coastal steamer "Jellicoe Rose" was driven ashore.

Searchlights of the aircraft carrier "Furious" were turned on the ship as attempts were made to get a breeches buoy across to her. They succeeded after seven failures, and the crew of thirteen has been safely removed.

In the west country a number of roads are impassable as a result of the storm, and reports received by the storming organisations indicate that snow has fallen and is lying to a depth of several inches in Yorkshire.—British Wireless.

BLUNT TALK ON COLONIES

London, Yesterday. Speaking at Oxford last night the Marquess of Dufferin and Ava, Under Secretary for the Colonies, said His Majesty's Government did not contemplate transference of any British territory to any other power.

It was unthinkable, he argued, that any of her former colonies should be returned to Germany under conditions likely to reproduce in Africa those which prevailed in Europe at the present time.—British Wireless.

Oslo, Yesterday. H.M.S. Royal Oak, which conveyed the body of Queen Maud of Norway from England, arrived at Oslo this morning.

Dense crowds lined the route through which the funeral procession passed this afternoon.—Reuter.

RT. HON. A. DUFF COOPER ON THE National Register Plan

THE New Session of Parliament has begun. It is likely to be one of the most important sessions in British history. It follows immediately upon the greatest crisis that has occurred in international affairs since 1914. It will be followed, almost certainly, by a general election.

The debates that took place in both Houses during the last weeks provide an indication of the subjects which are likely to absorb the attention of Parliament during the months that lie ahead. The first of these subjects is rearmament, with which I propose to deal in this article. The second is the future of the British colonies, which means the future of the British Empire.

Recent debates revealed two tendencies. First, a disinclination to look back into the past, to squabble over the events of September or to speculate upon what might have been the results of a different policy. Relief that peace has been preserved is as widespread as is reluctance to enquire too closely into the measures which were necessary to preserve it. We cannot blame the heir to a fortune if he accepts it without meticulous investigation into the manner in which it was acquired.

But the other tendency, not less closely pronounced, was a determination to look forward into the future in order to ensure that a disaster so narrowly avoided shall not be allowed to threaten Britain again. It would be idle to deny that the minds of those who are hoping that the lesson of 1938 will bear fruit in 1939 are filled with anxiety which the assurance given by Ministers were insufficient to dispel.

The reason for this anxiety is that the conviction has been brought home to many members of the community and is rapidly spreading, that the whole scheme of British rearmament policy is conceived upon too small a scale. The world has changed catastrophically in the last five years. The people of Great Britain are slow to perceive what is taking place on the continent of Europe. The narrow seas which have so largely lost their utility as a barrier still perform the less desirable function of a screen.

Two public utterances of last week may be taken as symptomatic of the outlook which still divides Europe from Great Britain. Dr. Ley, the Head of the German Labour Front, said that the efforts made by Germany during the past five years must now be redoubled, that they must not only maintain their lead in aerial armament and other fields but must increase it many times and that they must multiply their production by a 100% if they were to obtain sufficient territory for their needs. (LEBENSRAUM). This was said just a month after his Leader's solemn assurance that Germany's territorial ambitions in Europe were at an end and that her colonial aspirations could never lead to war.

At the same time, Sir Thomas Inskip the British Minister for Co-ordination of Defence was assuring the boys of Kingston Grammar School that if Great Britain had lost prestige during the past few weeks—and he did not admit that she had—she was quite certain, that she would recover it "merely because we had in this country a traditional and historic capacity for recovery by sheer force of character of our race, the reputation that we have in the capitals of Europe and the world."

The two statements belong to two different periods. The latter takes one back to Rugby Chapel in the middle of that last century. But there is a great gulf fixed between Dr. Arnold and Dr. Goebbels. The Hitler Jugend have very different school days from those which were enjoyed by Tom Brown. They also are encouraged to develop force of character—and it would be a bold man who would claim any monopoly for Great Britain in that respect—but they are taught that force of character should be supplemented by aeroplanes, submarines and machine guns.

The plain fact which we have got to get into our heads is that to-day the whole continent of Europe is organised for war. That every man in that continent is a trained fighter and that it is the intention of every Government to expedite and intensify military preparations. Great Britain alone although her world responsibilities are far vaster than those of any other country remains "firm in her refusal to abandon the system which served her so well in the 19th century and to regard war as anything but an extremely remote possibility which can be satisfactorily dealt with by small professional forces.

The anxiety which exists in the country and which was reflected in Parliament found practical expression in two demands. One was for the setting up of a Ministry of Supply and the other was for a National Register. The demand for a Ministry of Supply was turned down by the Prime Minister for the inadequate reason that it would be useless unless it was furnished with compulsory powers. The obvious method of overcoming that difficulty would be to furnish it with such power. If it were objected that to do so would be a breach of the Prime Minister's pledge not to introduce compulsion during the lifetime of the present Parliament, it should be remembered that the lifetime is rapidly drawing to its close. Its end might be hastened and there could be no better argument for hastening it than the urgency of introducing some measure of compulsion.

NATIONAL REGISTER

The British Government have undertaken to compile a National Register but this register is to be upon a voluntary basis. The value of such a register will be precisely nil. It would be as useful to have a compendium of Christmas Goose Clubs. It will merely be a record of the pious aspirations or the passing moods of a number of people of doubtful patriotism. For those who are truly anxious to serve their country are doing so at present in the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve, in the Territorial Army or in the Auxiliary Air Force. No National Register is required for them. Meanwhile a great many who should be serving in one or other of the above are seeking a safer and an easier billet under the auspices of A.R.P.

But those who are doing nothing at present will when the Voluntary National Register is set up be able to save their easy consciences by volunteering to do something when the crisis occurs. As the whole thing is to be on a voluntary basis, however, no means can exist of holding them to their word.

There are indeed many unanswerable arguments against drawing up a National Register on a voluntary basis but the shortest and the simplest is this. When a war breaks out, the people of Great Britain will not allow the whole brunt of it to be borne by those who have had the energy and courage to volunteer their services in peace time while their jobs are taken by the slackers and the cowards. There will be an irresistible demand that a new and real register of the whole nation on a compulsory basis be drawn up immediately and the old one will only remain as an historical curiosity, as a record of time wasted by Civil Servants, of money wasted by the public and of the ineptitude of Ministers.

Dustbin Dictators

WHILE men like Mr. Abraham Hewitt, ironmonger, of Bournemouth, live, Democracy shall stand. Mr. Hewitt puts his rubbish in a wooden receptacle. The Bournemouth Corporation said he was to use a galvanised iron dustbin.

He refused, and was summoned and fined. He still refused, and was summoned again.

The Chairman asked him to be reasonable. A refusal would cost him 55s. a week.

Mr. Hewitt: I have made my decision. I am not retreating.

"Don't you ever change your mind?"

"No, sir, my name is not Chamberlain. I reckon the Corporation is trying to Hitler me."

There is a limit, said John Stuart Mill, to the legitimate interference of collective opinion with individual independence; and to find that limit and maintain it against encroachment is as indispensable as protection against political despotism.

This lion-hearted ironmonger, who lived unknown till Persecution lifted him to fame, believes that this limit of interference is reached with a law of compulsory iron dustbins.

An official truly gauged the depth of this man's convictions when he said that oratory would have no effect. "Who tries to quell this steadfast soul," he said to himself "tilts with a straw against a champion eased in adamant."

And looking into the unflinching eyes of this champion, he knew that for him it was wooden dustbins or death.

Thrilled as you are, however, by this spectacle of defiance against odds, you may say you would applaud more readily if you knew what cause he happened to be defending.

Clearly some fundamental principle is involved. Surely only the deepest conviction could move an ironmonger to take so firm a stand against a piece of ironmongery. Had he been a carpenter or a timber merchant, his devotion to the cause of wooden receptacles would have been more easily comprehensible to a nation which has made "Our Trade Our Politics" its rallying cry in a hundred battles for the Right.

But here, in this indomitable man, we see the workings of a faith so imperative and a conscience so deeply stirred as to cause him to renounce all material interest and pursue his ideal to death.

What secret does this receptacle hold that it should impel him to stand four-square to the Mayor and Corporation, fearless of fines while his heart approves?

I feel the matter goes deeper than mere protest against an isolated act of bureaucratic tyranny. I believe we are witnessing the first stirrings of democratic revolt against a dictatorship more sinister than any: the dictatorship of standardisation.

The dictators of Europe shall soon pass away. But a little while and their clamouring mouths are stopped with dust. But the menace of mass-production will remain, stifling the expression of man's creative spirit in the interests of a blind industrial expansion.

The eagle eye of this martyr, piercing beyond the grave and the Corporation, saw this threat to England's soul. "Where is domestic security?" he cried (I believe). "Where is the sanctity of the home and the freedom of individual choice, if a man may not design his own dustbin?"

"Once permit any article of domestic utility to be limited to a statutory form and substance," he said (I imagine), "and the thin end of the wedge of regimentation has been driven into an Englishman's home!"

He sees the day not far distant when every English home is invaded periodically for an official inspection of furniture. He sees the pictures on his fellows' walls subjected to an official purge, and orders given to remove "The Monarch of the Glen" from above the sitting-room mantel-piece and replace it by an enlarged photograph of the new Town Hall.

And so he stands firm, and pays his thirty-five bob fine, amid the dew-fall of a nation's tears.

Finally, in this revolt against the metal dustbin I see man's first articulate challenge to the tyranny of iron.

With the Iron Age came wars, despotism, and the maldistribution of communal wealth. Cultivated first as a military necessity in the dawn of human bondage, the use of this uncomfortable metal has led mankind from one sinful error to another until, reaching the summit of his folly, he invented the internal combustion engine, and now lives in the shadow of the wings of streamlined death.

As the Chinese philosopher said when he first saw an aeroplane, "When these insects die, Man will be born."

All honour, therefore, to the man who, despite the claims of his means of livelihood, has first taken his stand for a return to an age of slower and gentler ways and the more truly civilised standards of the woodworker. Though, I hope, they will let me keep my bicycle.

He will be martyred, of course. They will fine him and fine him again, and he will see his wooden receptacle dismantled and burnt. But be of good cheer, Master Ironmonger. The flames of its destruction will that day light upon a candle in Bournemouth as I trust by God's grace shall never be put out.

(And in case, by any chance, I am mistaken in my interpretation of this man's action, I should like to add that it was not what he did it for it jolly well ought to have been.)

LEG ACES AND PAINS soon vanish when Elasto is taken. Painful and swollen (varicose) veins are forgotten and soon disappear, skin troubles clear up, leg sores become clean and healthy and quickly heal, piles are cured, inflammation and irritation are soothed, rheumatism simply fades away, and the whole system is braced and strengthened. This is not magic, although the relief does seem magical. It is the natural result of revitalised blood and improved circulation brought about by Elasto; the tiny tablet with wonderful healing powers!

Not a Drug, but a Vital Cell-Food!

Elasto is something new to curative science; it dispenses entirely with the use of drugs; it is based on the knowledge that swollen veins, leg sores, piles, rheumatism, hardened arteries, heart weakness—to name but a few of the many ailments associated with bad circulation—are deficiency diseases; that in all such conditions there is a lack of certain vital constituents of the blood. Owing to this lack the body is unable to build up the elastic tissue needed to maintain the vein and artery walls and the membranes in a healthy condition, and a state of flabbiness results. Elasto restores to the blood the vital elements which combine with the blood albumin to form organic elastic tissue and thus enables Nature to restore elasticity to the relaxed and devitalised fabric of veins, arteries and heart, and so to re-establish normal circulation—the real basis of sound health.

Every sufferer should know of this wonderful New Biological remedy, which quickly brings ease and comfort, and creates within the system a new health force; overcoming sluggish, unhealthy conditions, increasing vitality and bringing into full activity Nature's own powers of healing. Elasto is prepared in tiny tablets, which dissolve instantly on the tongue, and it is absorbed directly into the blood stream thereby actually restoring the natural power of healing to the blood. You will be amazed at the marvelous results of this pleasant, easy remedy; no fuss; no trouble; just glorious relief. And, remember, Elasto is not expensive. For a small outlay you can now enjoy the tremendous advantages of this modern scientific remedy which has cost thousands of pounds to perfect.

Read What Users of Elasto Say:

"No signs of varicose veins now."
"My doctor highly praises Elasto."
"Rheumatoid arthritis gone; I have never felt better."

BRITISH MEDIATION REPORTS REFUTED

NO MENTION MADE IN SIR ROBERT CRAIGIE'S TALK WITH MR. ARITA

London, Yesterday.

There is no foundation, says the diplomatic correspondent of "The Times," for the suggestion made in the Japanese press that Sir Robert Craigie, the British Ambassador in Tokyo, in his conversation on November 1 with the Japanese Premier, proposed on behalf of the British Government that Britain should mediate between Japan and China.

The correspondent adds that the conversation on that occasion was general, and no such proposal was made.

CZECH BORDER CLASH AFFAIR SETTLED

Warsaw, Yesterday.

A dramatic incident which led to Polish military forces making a premature occupation of the territory which was to be ceded to Poland on December 1, was settled last evening through diplomatic channels, according to a message from Prague.

Earlier in the day the Polish Foreign Office had issued an official communiqué.

It said that the shots were fired at the Polish delegate when travelling through Czechoslovakian territory on behalf of the mixed Polish-Slovak frontier rectification commission and accused the Czechoslovakian authorities and the regular military forces of having taken part in this attack.

The incident occurred at Cadon. It has not yet been ascertained how many casualties were suffered in this shooting affair which caused a sensation in Warsaw and Prague.

News has reached here that the Prague Government has ordered the withdrawal of Czechoslovak military from the district of Cadon thus enabling the Polish forces to occupy the remainder of the Slovak territory which it had been arranged to cede to Poland. — Trans-Ocean.

Tokyo, Yesterday.

Fairly strong earthquakes were recorded over a wide area in Japan at 5.20 yesterday afternoon.

This was the third shock since Nov. 6. — Reuter.

The correspondent declares that in the recent talks between the British Ambassador to China, Sir Archibald Clark-Kerr, and General Chiang Kai-shek, the question of mediation was "scarcely mentioned."

The Chinese Government, according to information in London, are as loth to discuss terms as are the Japanese, and remain convinced of the ultimate victory of their cause.

The correspondent adds that the British attitude remains that laid down in the King's Speech at the opening of Parliament. — Reuter.

SCORES OF ARAB LEADERS MURDERED

Jerusalem, Yesterday.

Arab gunmen have been responsible for the deaths of at least 133 Arabs since the beginning of the disturbances in April, 1936, according to the "Palestine Post."

By the end of October, 1938, the victims included the Mayor of Hebron, ten prominent mukhtars (headmen), twenty-four notables, twenty-seven members of the police, fifty-five others who tried to resist gang law, and several women.

Some thirty lesser known victims were shot dead as part of the "purge," and the newspaper points out that there must be numerous other murders not listed.

It is reported from all Arab sources that many notables have fled from Palestine with their families owing to intimidation, and that there are at least 25,000 Arab refugees in Lebanon and Syria alone. — Reuter.

AND STILL THEY COME.

UNDERMINING FRANCO-SOVIET TREATY

London, Yesterday.

It seems unlikely that the future of the Franco-Soviet Pact passed without mention during the Anglo-French talks in Paris, states the Paris correspondent of "The Times."

The correspondent adds: "According to one report, when asked what action France would take in the event of an attack on the Ukraine, M. Bonnet (the French Foreign Minister) replied quite simply that France was bound to go to the help of Russia only in the event of her being the victim of unprovoked aggression."

"This apparent emphasis on the interpretation of what constitutes unprovoked aggression would hardly seem to point to an appreciable strengthening of the Pact."

The correspondent declares that during the discussion of aircraft production, the French representatives are believed to have expressed confidence in their ability to produce a very considerable increase in the machines now in service.

"Some quarters give the figure as five-fold but if this is so, the British representatives may well have regarded the prediction as too optimistic." — Reuter.

FORUM CONCERT

"The King Of The Cannibal Island" will be the main feature of the English Forum's first concert next Saturday evening when they present "A Family Show" at the Chinese Young Women's Christian Association in Bonham Road.

The function has been organised for raising funds for war relief work, and is scheduled to commence at 8 p.m.

SALUTE THE SOLDIER

Chungking, Yesterday.

The Chinese Government, in a circular issued to-day, orders the entire country that "when Chinese troops are marching to the front or are returning to the front, the populace on route must salute them in order to respect Chinese soldiers fighting for their country, and also to bring about closer and more friendly relations between the army and the populace." — Reuter.

"ENEMY" WIN VITAL POINTS IN COMBINED OPERATIONS

THE LAST PHASE IN THE COMBINED MANOEUVRES TOOK PLACE LAST NIGHT ON THE WEST SIDE OF THE ISLAND, EMBRACING THE POKFULAM DISTRICT.

Searchlight Batteries from Stonecutters, Green Island and at vantage points from Sandy Bay to beyond Waterfall Bay swept the seas nightlong and shortly before 10.45 p.m. enemy sea craft were sighted, two destroyers being picked out while a submarine was found quite close to the shore, standing about a quarter of a mile out.

Although the vessels appeared to be inactive, light craft in the shape of junks and ships boats were clearly discernible alongside when the searchlights played directly on the vessel.

IN "ENEMY" HANDS Prior to last night's action practically the whole of Hong Kong Island had fallen into "enemy" hands.

Little activity occurred on Thursday morning which was spent by troops in re-establishment.

Late in the evening warships and transports were sighted off Stanley Peninsula, and the bombardment of the southern defences of the island heralded an attack of some weight which landed at Deep Water Bay, where the bombardment had been particularly heavy.

This landing suffered severely and could penetrate no further than Shousan Hill where it consolidated.

BACK TO WALL During the night, the enemy were greatly reinforced, and attacking at dawn had scaled the heights and captured Wanchai Gap, Magazine Gap and the major portion of the defence. By eleven o'clock yesterday morning, Hong Kong lay at their feet.

The Hong Kong defenders had thrown all their available reserves to check the momentum of this attack, but by night-fall they had carried out a considerable measure of reorganisation and established a "back to the wall" position running from Aberdeen to the Dockyard and including Mt. Gough. This was manned by the H.K.V.D.C. and the remnants of the defence, and commanded by the Commandant, Hong Kong Volunteer Defence Corps.

That part of the Island East of the above line had fallen to the enemy by nightfall.

BLOOD TESTS FOR PATERNITY

London, Yesterday.

The process of undertaking microscopic examination of the blood in order to establish paternity of illegitimate children, already in vogue in various European states, seems about to be adopted legally in England.

Hitherto, compulsory examination of blood has been resisted because it was considered an "attack on personal liberty."

Now, however, Lord Merthyr has introduced a motion into the House of Lords that in connection with a case now before a London court, blood examination should be made compulsory.

If this motion should be carried, all courts in England in all future suits would be in a position to order a compulsory blood test. — Trans-Ocean.

Drastic Daladier Action

Mobilisation As Military Deemed Possible

Spare Parts Used As Missiles Against Police

Paris, Yesterday.

It is believed in Government circles that State employees will obey the call to participate in Wednesday's general strike.

Reason given is in view of the increases in their salaries under the new decree laws in protest against which paradoxically the strike was called.

Measures for instant dismissal of any State employee going on strike are being considered, however.

Despite the adverse votes of the Left political parties, it is understood that the Premier feels that he has considerable support throughout the country for the decrees, and is therefore determined to carry on using a strong hand to deal with the situation.

During the last few days the Government has envisaged various measures which may become necessary, including, it is reported, recourse to the law for organisation of the nation in time of war, voted in July this year.

MOBILISATION POSSIBLE The law provides for mobilisation in the event of trouble of all public services and large industries indispensable for national defence.

Late last night, strike agitation in the Valenciennes district, where the trouble first flared up, was stated to be decreasing, and evacuation of some of the pits occupied by the striking miners was progressing.

A foreman who defended himself when attacked by miners trying to make him run naked through the pits, was seriously injured and was taken to hospital by another foreman. — Reuter.

Paris, Yesterday.

All mines in the Valenciennes region have been requisitioned by the Minister of Labour, who was given power to do so in an official decree published this morning. Fifteen thousand miners have returned to work.

All miners of the Danzin Company, near Denain, this morning received orders to return to work, failing which they would have to appear before a military tribunal on a charge of rebellion.

All of them obeyed, as have all others in other companies hitherto similarly warned.

THREAT ENOUGH As a result the total number on strike in the region has dropped to about 10,000, and these have agreed to return to work on Monday provided no disciplinary action is taken.

At the same time, the strike movement has spread among metal workers in the north of France, but thanks to the same measure and a threat to despatch Guards Mobiles, all the occupied engineering factories are now evacuated.

Four demonstrators out of thousands who occupied the Renault works were sentenced to ten days' imprisonment and fined 25 francs on a charge of rebellion. Altogether 282 demonstrators were arrested but only four chose summary trial.

"MOBILISATION" CARD The railway serving the Danzin mines, which was requisitioned last night, is now working smoothly with passenger and goods trains.

All 2,000 men employed on the railway except four, have returned to work after receiving their "mobilisation" card.

All engineering factories in the Valenciennes region have now been evacuated, and thus 70 establishments have been cleared of about 25,000 workers.

Many hundreds of foreigners are employed in the mines, especially Poles, and as the authorities have not the right to mobilise them, they will be made subject to an immediate expulsion order if they refuse to work. Military guards at all powder magazines and arms depots have been doubled.

The situation in the Paris region remains stationary. Damage estimated at many thousands of pounds was caused at the Renault works where spare parts were used as missiles against the police. Employers of the Renault works ordered a lock-out. — Reuter.

RIBBENTROP VISIT TO PARIS POSTPONED

Berlin, Yesterday.

The departure for Paris of the Nazi Foreign Minister, Herr von Ribbentrop, originally scheduled to take place on Monday next, will probably be postponed till a later date, according to a statement made in political circles here to-day.

It is assumed that reason for the delay is the unsettled economic situation in France, particularly the mass strikes already going on and about to begin.

No new date for Herr von Ribbentrop's visit to Paris has yet been chosen, since before any decision can be arrived at the question of whether the Daladier Cabinet will be able to weather the present storm of attacks on its home and economic policy made by its political opponents, must be decided. — Trans-Ocean.

CONDITION OF POPE IMPROVES

Rome, Yesterday.

Pope Pius XI passed a good night and his condition was slightly improved this morning, which permits the hope that the heart attack which His Holiness suffered yesterday will leave no permanent consequences, although in view of the advanced age of the patient who is 61, and his asthma it is not yet possible to say that the crisis is definitely overcome.

The Pope's nephew, Count Franco Ratti, arrived home from Milan this morning and proceeded at once to the Vatican. Relatives of the Pope and Cardinals are staying at the bedside.

Religious services in the Vatican, which is to be opened on Sunday, will naturally not be attended by the Pope this year.

It will be recalled that owing to over exertion during these services two years ago the Pope contracted the illness from which he recovered only last summer. — Trans-Ocean.

CEYLON'S BAR TO INVASION

Colombo, Yesterday.

Legislation to prevent alien doctors and dentists from entering Ceylon from Europe has been passed by the State Council with unprecedented despatch.

The speed with which the legislation went through all stages was due to local members of the medical profession, who are well-organised and extremely influential. — Reuter.

GENERAL STRIKE CALL IN FRANCE THREATENS CRISIS

Paris, Yesterday.

Despite the determined efforts of the Government to deal firmly with what it regards as the "unjustified, inopportune and unco-operative outbreaks of strikes," the labour situation in France is growing more serious daily.

One of the principal grievances of the strikers is against the decree extending the 40-hour week, but the political rather than the industrial nature of the strikes is obvious.

Builders, small businessmen and artisans decided to strike yesterday. All demand the resignation of the Premier, M. Edouard Daladier.

A stormy session of Parliament is foreshadowed as result of clashing resolutions passed by the Socialist and Republican groups in the Chamber of Deputies.

The Socialists adopted a resolution demanding immediate resignation of the Government.

Another resolution, passed unanimously, expressed regret that the Anglo-French talks did not result in publication of a joint statement regarding the integrity of colonies, protectorates and mandates.

SECRET DIPLOMACY

A third resolution protested against the elaboration of conventions binding the country's foreign policy without the knowledge of Parliament.

On the other hand, the Republicans have passed a resolution urging the Government to take strong measures against all agitators.

The resolution denounces the "purely political nature of the strikes which even ignore the needs of national defence, and the criminal work of the Communists, who having failed to start a European war, are trying to start a civil war."—Reuter.

STATE OF SIEGE?

Paris, Yesterday.

The French Federation of Trade Unions decided at a meeting of the Executive Committee yesterday afternoon to proclaim a 24-hours general strike in all French industries on Wednesday next.

According to Trade Union circles the Government may try to nip the strike in the bud by imposing the state of siege over the entire country.

It is believed in informed quarters that the Government will take precautions to prevent any disturbance in the functioning of public utilities concerns and transportation systems.

MILITARY LAW

Another preventive measure prominently mentioned is that of

MERCURY AND XMAS MAIL

London, Yesterday.
The Mayo composite aircraft, the upper component of which has made an experimental flight across the Atlantic and a non-stop flight from Dundee to within a few hundreds miles of Cape Town, will have its part to play in the great organization created by Imperial Airways to carry the vast quantities of Christmas mail overseas.
The seaplane Mercury, launched above Southampton Water from the Under-component Maia, will make a number of special non-stop flights to Egypt carrying on each voyage nearly a ton of mail.—British Wireless.

yesterday morning before the decision of the Federation was known, to join the strike. Political leaders agreed yesterday that the decision of the Federation has considerably complicated the internal political situation.—Trans-Ocean.

UNION DECISION

Paris, Yesterday.

The strike planned for Wednesday will last 24 hours.

Work is to be resumed throughout the country on the morning of Thursday, December 1.

Workers engaged in the health services have been instructed not to interrupt their regular duties.

Trade Union officials are to take all necessary precautions to insure that the strike is carried out in a disciplined manner without oc-

DEMAND ON DALADIER TO RESIGN

Paris, Yesterday.

Assailed by Mr. Leon Blum who has requested M. Herriot, President of the Chamber, to bring in the motion of the Socialist Party demanding the resignation of the French Cabinet, M. Daladier now finds himself fighting for its existence, according to political circles.

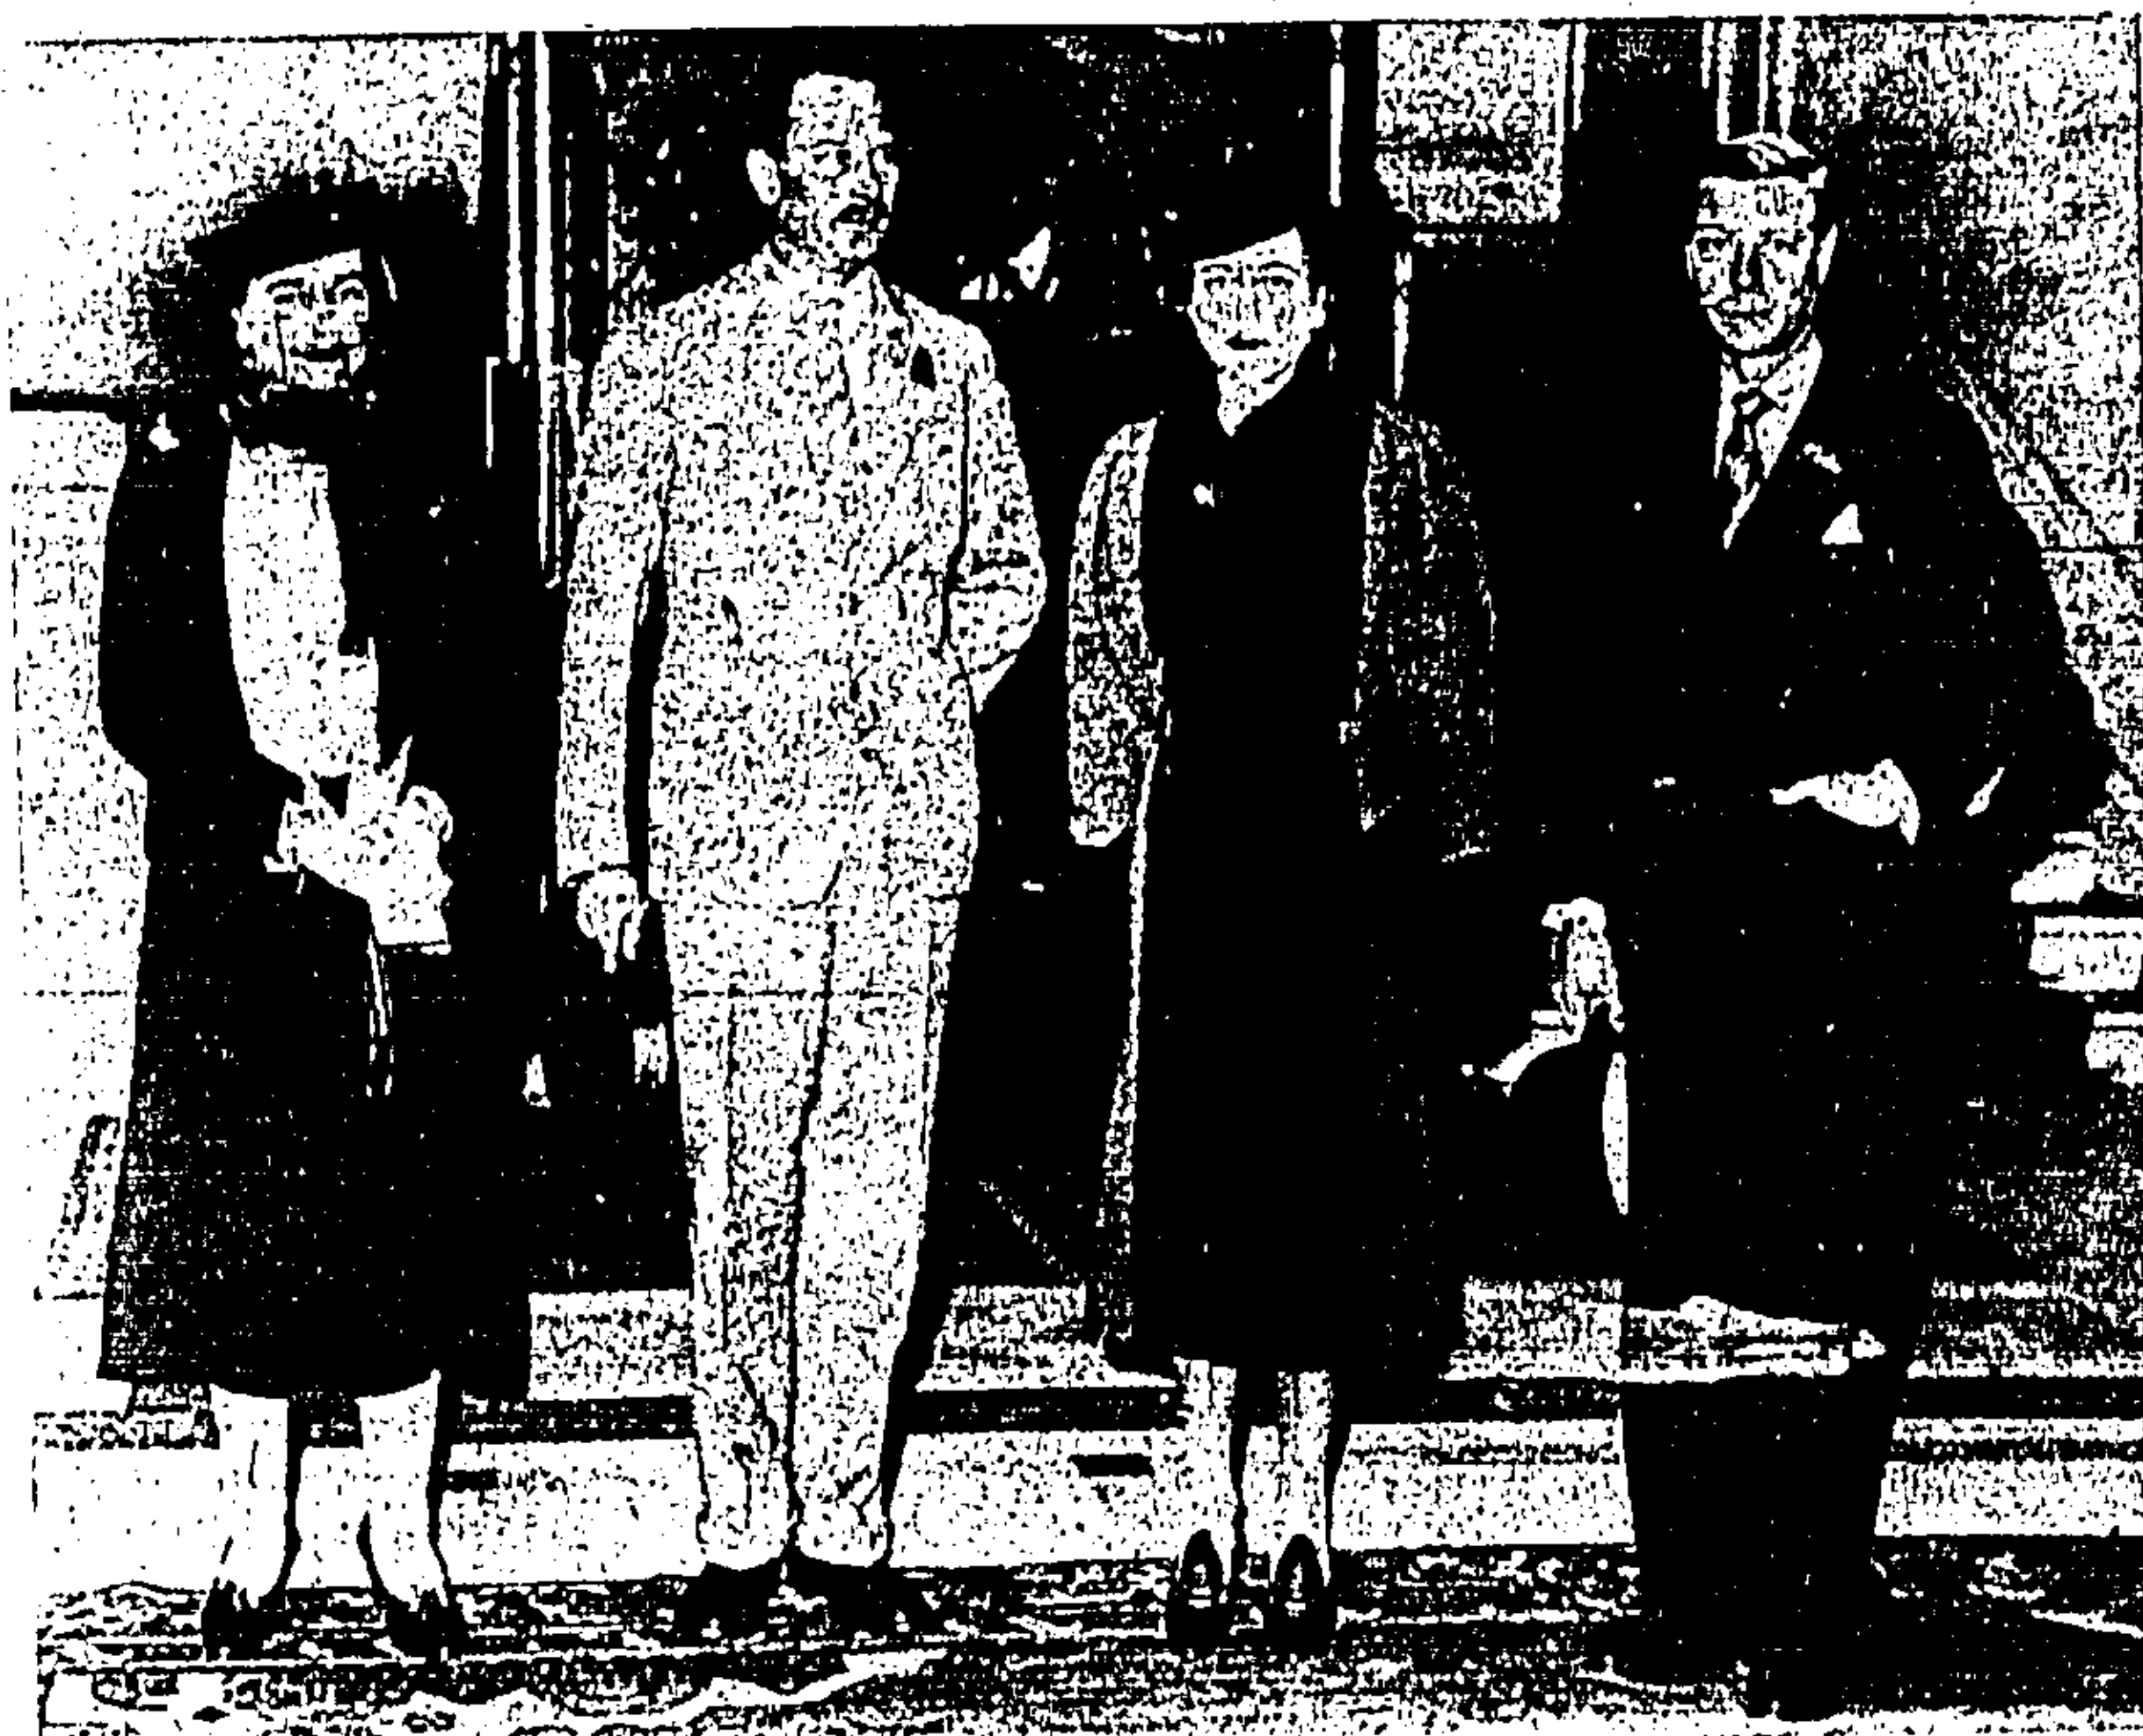

It would appear that M. Herriot had declined to grant the Socialist request, but there is not the slightest doubt that the Opposition is preparing to run full tilt at the Government.

The cleavage between the Radical Socialists and the Party of M. Blum is now complete. As there are now no prospects of future cooperation between the two groups, M. Daladier finds himself obliged to rely more and more upon the right wing parties who gave their backing to the emergency decrees of M. Reynaud.

The Premier is apparently resolved to fight the opposition with all means at his disposal.—Trans-Ocean.

occupation of factories or offices and without street demonstrations.

When the strike is over, the Trade Unions will resume "at an appropriate moment" their action against the Government decrees.—Trans-Ocean.

SKELETON!

Saved by flesh-forming tablets.

This man had been so terribly ill that he was almost as thin and bony as a skeleton. Yet simply by taking a course of tiny, tasteless tablets, he quickly put on pounds of firm, healthy flesh. In fact, he got heavier than he had been before his illness. Here is his letter:

"I have recently got up from an illness which pulled me down to a skeleton. After my doctor proclaimed me in a convalescent state, I commenced to take Clotab's and am now on the road to health and strength again and have built up more flesh than I had before my illness."—Mr. W.T.T., Essex, England.

All men and women who are too thin and underweight should begin to take Clotab's at once, for they are rich in the vitamins of Halibut Liver Oil, which doctors say is the finest thing out for putting good solid flesh on people who are underweight. Clotab's is even better than nasty, fishy-tasting Cod Liver Oil. And now you can get these wonderful flesh-forming, revitalizing vitamins in tasteless form, simply by taking two little sugar-coated tablets after each meal. Begin taking them to-day if you are under normal weight. See how quickly you will begin to put on flesh, feel energetic and full of life instead of languid and depressed. Notice how calm and steady your nerves become, how effortless it seems to work and play. Get a bottle of Clotab's brand Halibut Liver Oil Extract Tablets to-day. DANGEROUS COMPLACENCY REGARDING FAR EAST

"Manchester Guardian" Utters Strong Warning

The great German plane, Condor, which recently flew from Berlin to New York and back. This is the machine which is flying to Tokyo, starting to-morrow and should pass over or close to Hong Kong on Wednesday.

MOTHER SOLD ONLY SON: SENT TO PRISON

How a mother sold her only son for $65 without the knowledge of the father, and accused a stranger of taking the boy away was related yesterday morning before Mr. Q. A. A. Macfadyen at the Kowloon Magistracy when two Chinese women were found guilty of taking part in the selling of the lad.

The accused were 25-year-old, mother of the boy, Ho Ling, of Tai-kok-sai, Mong Kok, and 35-year-old Chan Tai, of No. 75, Nanchang Street.

Second accused, had a daughter, but wanted to adopt a son.

With a go-between, she visited first accused on Thursday and took the child away, giving the mother $65, of which she revealed afterwards, she only received $15, the remainder having been taken by the go-between as commission.

When the husband returned that afternoon, he was told the lad was playing outside. Later, when the child had not yet returned, he questioned his wife and was told that the boy had been taken away by another woman. She offered to take him to the woman's house.

Then she accused a complete stranger, a woman coming down some stairs, of taking the child away. An argument ensued and the three persons were taken to the Police Station by an Indian constable.

The case was referred to the S.C.A. and after investigations, the arrests were made. The go-between was not traced.

First accused was sentenced to six months' hard labour and the second was fined $50, or two months.

WEDDING AT CATHEDRAL

Carrying a bouquet of gladioli and African daisies, and charmingly attired in an ivory satin gown, with a veil and orange blossoms, Miss Maud Florence Crosby Powell, of Hayes, Middlesex, became the bride of Mr. Albert Billingham, of the Hong Kong Police Force, at St. John's Cathedral yesterday afternoon.

The ceremony was conducted by the Very Reverend J. L. Wilson, Dean of the Cathedral.

The bride was given away by Inspector T. Sabey, and Mrs. W. McHardy was the Matron-of-Honour. The bestman was Sergeant A. Haynes.

A reception was held at Lane Crawford's and was attended by a large number of friends, mostly members of the Hong Kong Police Force.

When Mrs. Billingham left for the honeymoon, which is being spent at Repulse Bay, she wore a deep maroon-blue two-piece costume, trimmed with fur, and a brown hat.

Among the guests were:—Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Post, Mrs. and Miss Smith, Mr. W. Cameron, Mrs. T.

Geisha Girls On Strike

Tokyo, Yesterday.

Eighty geishas in Tokyo have gone on strike after the Geisha Union and the Association of Hotel Proprietors had failed to reach an agreement about the percentage of turnover that geishas were to receive.

The Geisha Union demanded an increase in percentage paid because in consequence of the prosperity in the amusements industry, hotelkeepers were doing an exceptionally thriving business.—Trans-Ocean.

100 CASUALTIES IN RIOTS IN JO'BURG

PRETORIA, YESTERDAY. CASUALTIES IN THE DEMONSTRATIONS WHICH TOOK PLACE ON THURSDAY IN JOHANNESBURG ARE NOW PLACED AT OVER 100 ALTHOUGH THE EXACT NUMBER IS DIFFICULT TO ASCERTAIN AS NUMEROUS PERSONS WHO SUSTAINED INJURIES ARE RECEIVING TREATMENT.

In contradiction to first reports, it is stated that no one was killed but three persons were so badly injured that they are not expected to live.

It is learnt that as soon as the police report has been completed, the Mayor of Johannesburg will appeal to the South African Minister of Justice for sufficient reinforcements to prevent renewed outbreaks of violence.

Feeling is running so high throughout the city that it is feared that without severe measures to ensure security, further clashes will occur.

It is reported that the demonstrations were due to an incident which occurred a week ago.

MASS MEETINGS. The Society for Jews and Christians was holding a meeting in the course of which a woman is said to have called "He! Hitler" whereupon she was struck down. This led to a protest meeting at which leaflets were distributed bearing the words "All out in protest! African women beaten by Jewish Citizens join to protest against Jewish thieves who mistreat our women! We are still masters of our own country!"

The Anti-Fascist group retaliated by calling a counter-demonstration at the same time and place. As the two groups came together a clash ensued.

Pretoria papers emphasize that for the first time tear gas had to be used in quelling rioting between whites in South Africa.—Trans-Ocean.

Sinister Konoye Statement And Interpretation

LONDON, YESTERDAY.

RECOGNISING THAT THERE IS A NATURAL LIMIT TO THE NUMBER OF SUBJECTS WHICH CAN EXCITE AND AROUSE PUBLIC OPINION AT ANY ONE TIME, THE "MANCHESTER GUARDIAN" IN AN EDITORIAL THIS MORNING NEVERTHELESS INSISTS THAT "ALL PARTIES IN THIS COUNTRY ARE GUILTY OF A DANGEROUS COMPLACENCY IN REGARD TO THE FAR EAST."

The complacency of the Government is most reprehensible, and least explicable, the newspaper finds.

It supports this contention by recalling the "astonishing" statement by Mr. Neville Chamberlain in the House of Commons on November 1.

In this statement, the Prime Minister said, inter alia, "It is quite certain that when the war is over, and the reconstruction of China begins, she cannot possibly be reconstructed without some help from this country." The paper also recalls the attempt by Mr. R. A. Butler, the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, in the House of Commons on Nov. 9, to "explain away the statement."

THE TRUTH

"In truth, just as Mr. Butler's argument was based on the assumption of a Chinese victory, so Mr. Chamberlain's was based on the assumption that Japan will continue to respect the policy of the open door as laid down in the Nine Power Treaty," continues the editorial. Questioning what reason there is to believe the latter assumption, the "Manchester Guardian" charges the Japanese with having discriminated against foreign trade "in half a dozen ways" since the war began.

It adds: "It is possible to argue, as the Japanese themselves pretend, that these unfortunate happenings were merely accidental and inevitable in a war of such size."

SINISTER STATEMENT

"This would be more convincing if the Japanese Government still professed its respect for the policy of the open door, but even this is no longer true."

In this connection, the newspaper recalls a passage in the broadcast of the Japanese Premier, Prince Konoye, at the beginning of November as a "highly sinister statement" to anyone who has some understanding of Japanese phraseology.

The Journal adds that the statement is interesting because it was echoed again, "only more bluntly," by the reply of the Foreign Minister, Mr. Arita, to the United States protest.

SMOOTH PHRASES

The "Manchester Guardian" concludes:

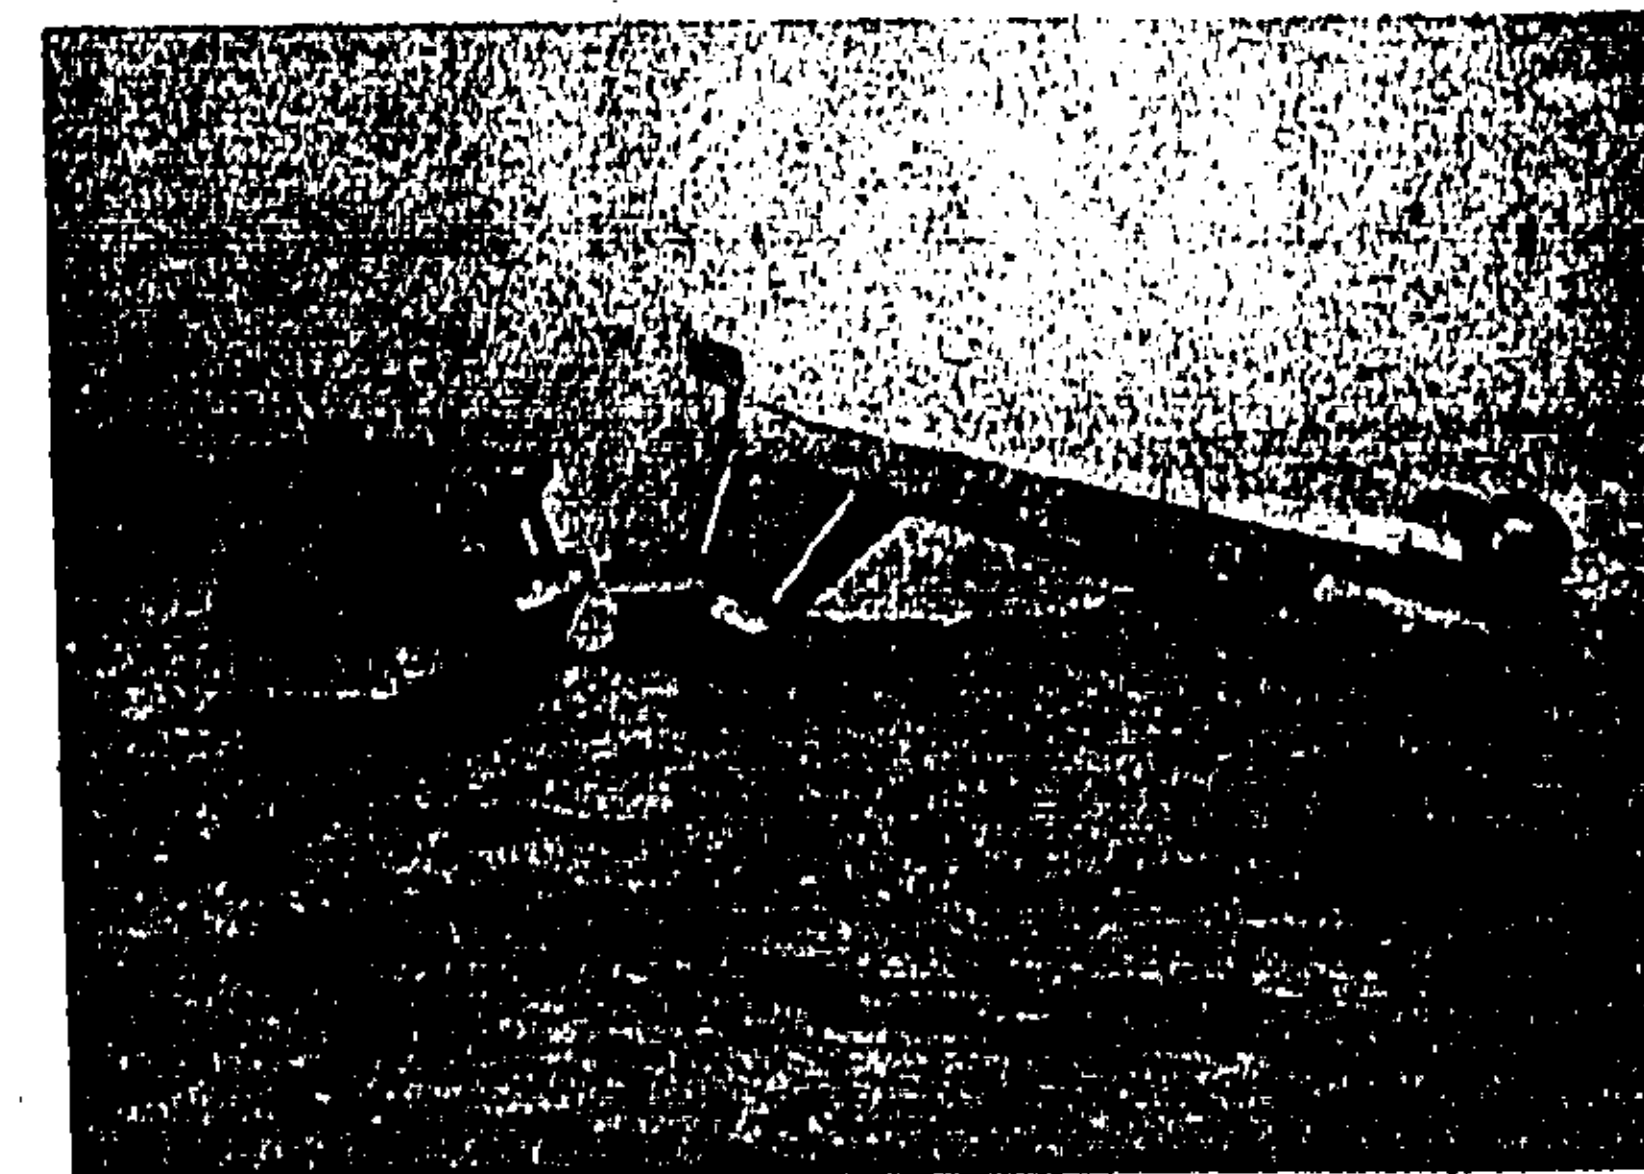

"Since some of our readers may think it fanciful to read into such smooth phrases such sharp meanings, one may quote finally from the East Asia News Service, an authoritative Japanese bulletin in London.

"The last number, calling attention to Mr. Arita's note, gives four reasons why it should be closely studied.

"The fourth reason is: 'It is a de facto denunciation of the Nine Power Treaty.'

"We should not like to contradict so well informed a source," Reuters.

KINSHAN RETURNS AFTER SIX WEEKS IN CANTON

After detention in Canton for more than six weeks, the H. K. river steamer, Kinshan, arrived in harbour yesterday afternoon, bringing 29 foreign passengers from Shameen, and the cargo which she carried to Canton.

The only interesting feature of the trip down was that the Japanese did not suggest the need for an escort vessel.

The Kinshan is going immediately into dock.

It was revealed, on her arrival, that while moored in Canton, a Japanese armed trawler collided with her. She is going into dock for examination and repair.

Among the 29 passengers there was only one woman, the list including:—

Messrs. Robert Jones, Robin Beardsworth, Mitchell, Mooney, Warren, Richard, Kanath, Hans Pieleke, Erwin Dileir, Lopp, Joseph Bank, W. Clark Watson, Henry S. Frank, Mr. Androssen, Rudolf Krug, Leo Bourguin, Frank Kosik, Remedios, Osorgine, Mohi Din, Mohamed Wahab Mohamed Rafiek, Mr. Medar, Mr. Bolan, Mr. Pastakin, Mr. Mehta, and Mrs. Barta.

DES VOEUX RD. CENTRAL ROBBERY

While walking along Des Voeux Road Central on Friday afternoon, Mrs. Santos, of No. 79, Wong Nei Chong Road, had her purse taken out of her pocket by a 20-year-old pickpocket, who made an unsuccessful attempt to escape.

He was pursued and arrested by an Indian Police Constable, and charged yesterday morning before Mr. R. A. D. Forrest at the Central Magistracy.

The youth, who was unemployed, was remanded until to-morrow morning.

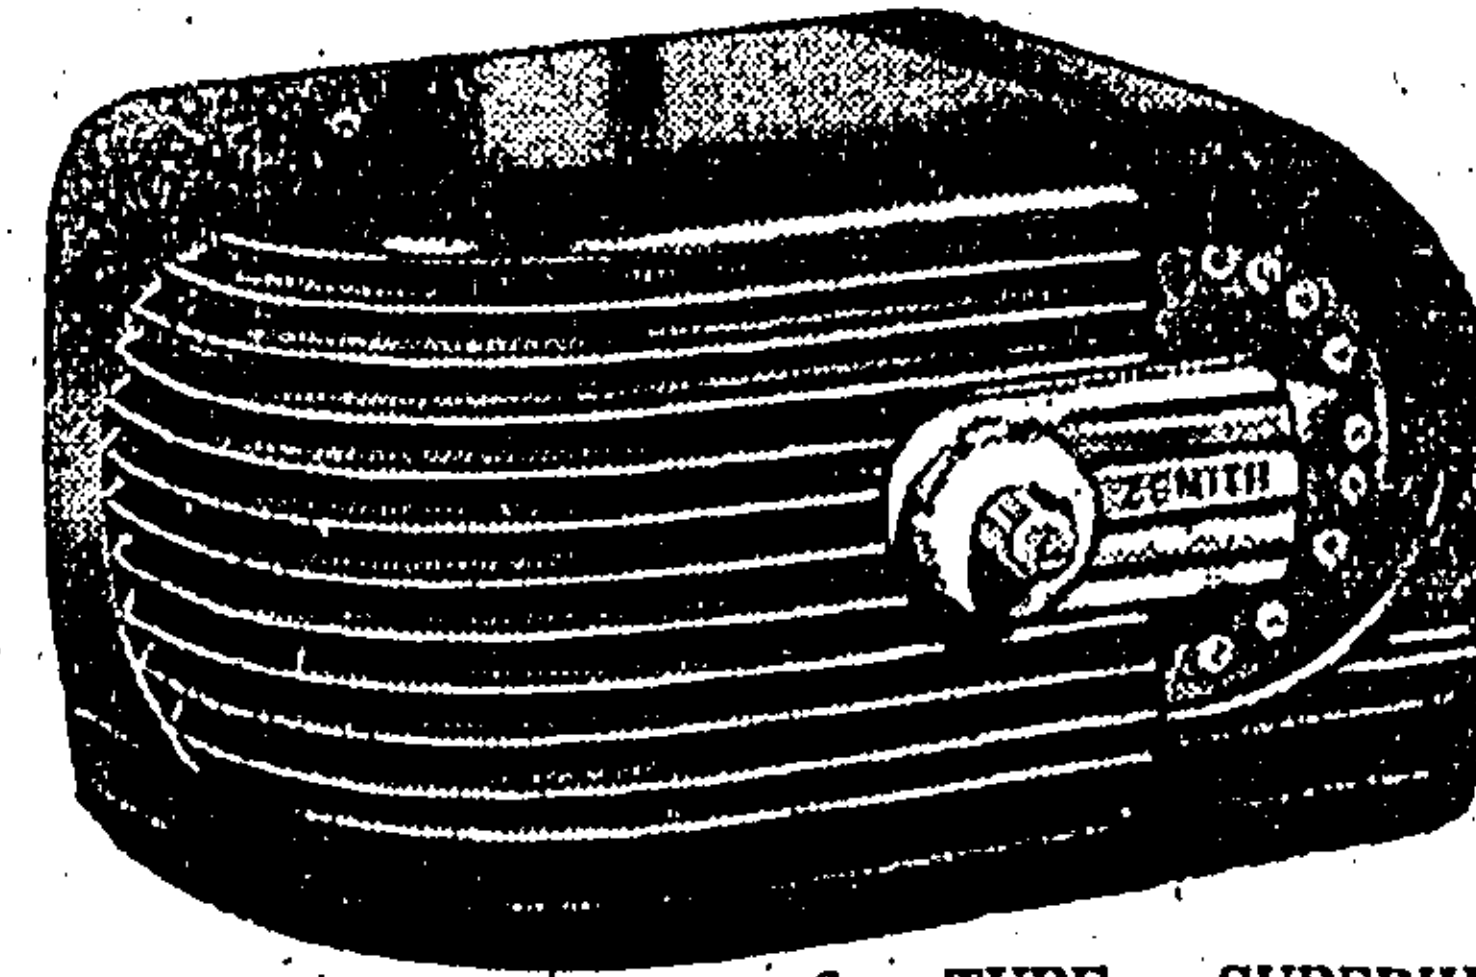

Another case of theft came before Mr. Forrest later in the morning, when a 19-year-old shop coolie, Li Yik, was accused of stealing a handbag and a pair of stockings from Mrs. R. R. Wood near the Royal Naval Recreation Club in Causeway Bay on Friday.

Accused denied the charge and was remanded until Tuesday morning.

Are You Guarding Your Child

THIS WAY—Asking Your Doctor About Home Remedies You Use?

Practically every mother knows the physician's rule. Don't give your child unknown remedies without asking your doctor first. Children's specialists give this warning continually. And educators and writers on child welfare repeat it everywhere.

When it comes to the widely used children's remedy—"milk of magnesia"—many doctors for over half a century have said "PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia is the standard of the world. Safe for children. Made by an original process in a laboratory devoted solely to making this important remedy; there is no other quite like it."

Keep this in mind, and say "PHILLIPS' MILK OF MAGNESIA" when you buy. Comes now also in tablet form. Tablets that taste like peppermint candy, and that contain the equivalent of the liquid Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. Get the form you prefer. But see that what you get is labeled "Genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia."

ALSO IN TABLET FORM: Each tiny tablet is the equivalent of a teaspoonful of the liquid Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

PRIVATE FACES IN PUBLIC PLACES

Between The Acts.

THE Cossacks say that in the late spring a cold wind blows because the oak-buds are opening. Whatever the truth of that, on this particular March morning, a bitter little breeze licked the streets of Kazan, whipping in and out of corners and nipping the tender green sprouts on the tree-lined avenues, and in general making life difficult for a little girl, aged twelve, without a coat or shawl. To be twelve years old and alone in a city where a pound of bread gave you a headache trying to work out the price in roubles that grew less with the hands of the clock, is trying. Still more unpleasant was the fact that Larissa had neither bread nor roubles.

THE only daughter of a Cossack, Larissa's father was away at the war. Her mother had died when she was very, very small, and after that Natasha, the housekeeper, had brought her up. Now, Natasha was dead and she was alone. A sweet mood of sorrow came over her; tears started into her eyes; everything seemed misty and uncertain. A gust of wind came whirling round the corner, plucked at the cap of the policeman on duty, and sent it bowling down the street. The feeling of miserable aloofness from all the world, that Larissa experienced, vanished. The hat danced gaily down the road, implying rolling from side to side every time the policeman dived for it.

THE black-eyed little girl ran to the horse trough and retrieved the policeman's hat. The exercise warmed her limbs, and throwing the cap to its puffing owner, she kept on running, right round the corner to the house of Federov. Federov was over sixty. His hair was completely white, and he wore a velvet skull cap to keep the cold away from the bald spot on the crown of his head. His eyes were dim, his face wrinkled, but to himself he was still the Federov that had danced before the Emperor and who had received the Order of St. Nicholas, 3rd Class, from the hands of Ykaterinburg's unhappy prisoner. Everybody understood this, even Kazan's brand new Commissar, who though he persisted in attending the Opera in an undress tunic, was not too revolutionary to respect the eccentricities of a once great artist.

FEDEROV bowed over the hand of his visitor. He did not notice that it was a very thin little hand, nor that Larissa was coatless. "And how is your dancing, child?" he asked, then remembering that Larissa had not attended his class for some time, mumbled: "There is no better teacher than Federov." Only quite heartless and stupid people failed to understand this old bag of bones who took snuff and lived in the past. Larissa who was neither, curtsied, said, simply, that it was difficult to dance when one was hungry, and would he please recommend her to the Director of the Opera. Federov looked at her critically. "You must cut your Director refused to give her the little book which every other member of the company possessed and without which one has less rights than a stray dog. Larissa, who now had a warm coat and as an artist was entitled along with the factory workers, to a double ration of bread, was happy enough to be able to dance, and did not bother about the little book until one day, when the company tried out a new ballet before the prisoners of Kazan goal.

Larissa pointed out that she was the only ballerina without one, the Director relented and issued the necessary instructions to the Commissar for Art.

ABLE to leave Kazan and travel without let or hindrance through the length and breadth of the Soviet Republics, this fourteen-year old child journeyed to Moscow, became the darling of proletarian balletomanes and the toast of numerous influential party members. After a year of scheming and wirepulling, Larissa finally obtained an order classifying her father as "minus five," which meant that he was free, but prohibited from residing in any of the Soviet's five big cities.

LARISSA, delightful member of the Dimitri trio, the dancing of which has earned the tribute of "best ever" at the Grippa.

hair like a boy's, then perhaps they will take you as a faun." Larissa nodded. Federov, as became a man who has been overmuch in the society of ladies and is bored with their charms, added wearily: "Please understand that my interest is for your career."

THERE, in the front row, chained to the next prisoner, a man. Larissa noticed him because the rest of the audience viewed the performance in dull silence, whilst he clanked his chains at every entrance and exit she made. Not until he shouted her name did she recognise the solitary applauder as her father; for on the day he had lifted her up on the saddle of his great bay to kiss her goodbye, his hair had been black. Now it was white, and in place of the upright figure in blue and silver, squatted a bent, dejected creature whose lined cheeks and deathly pallor bespoke confinement in the cells below the river.

LARISSA continued to pirouette though she could not see the stage or audience for tears. She made no sign that she had seen; for to acknowledge acquaintance with a political prisoner was tantamount to becoming one yourself. As soon as the show was over, she went to the Director of the Company and demanded her little book. After some argument, in the course of which dreams. Like drink to apoll me. One night I dream of the whole world: England, France, America. After that I cannot sleep. Then a friend tell me about a contrabandis. He ask five hundred silver dollars. I tell him: 'I can't pay all.' He say 'all right, you pay me when you have beeg job in Shanghai.' He is generous because he has beeg money for banker's son. He arrange to take heem first, but the banker's son is in concentrate lager and cannot escape. The contrabandis cannot stop more than two days in Vladivostok, because the police will catch heem. So he come queek for me. I have no time to get my clothes; he tell me I must come now or never. I have only my dancing shoes and costume. The contrabandis give me sailor's coat and make me black my face like dirty boy. Eet is snowing. I'm crazy, but I don't care."

WE ducked the answer. "What made you leave Russia?" "Dreams, crazy

AFTER one mile my shoes break to pieces. The contrabandis very risk man. He go danger place. I tell heem he is fool. He laugh, say police don't think any contrabandis such a fool either. I am cold, so cold, I like to die. The contrabandis give me gun, but the clicker is frozed. Daytime we hide in country places. After five nights we come to Harbin and I am safe. But I can never see Russia again," she finished, sadly.

"AND did your dream come true?" "A little bit, yes; a little bit, no," said Larissa, thoughtfully. In Harbin I have hard time. The hotel is very bad. They have no sheet, so I sleep on newspapers. In the morning I have all the news on my body. Also there is no soap

LITTLE NOTES of Great Importance

by Editor

For a daring colour splurge, dive headlong into EXCELLA, 188 Nathan Road and emerge in a burrundy afternoon frock that is bound to start some thing . . . even if it is only a craze for this ripest of Autumn colours. We nominate this frock as being among the prettiest seen this week, and urge you to buy it, if you're a size 14. If not, be well contented with a real blue creation, with fascinating rhinestone clumps trimming the open front. The giddiest, gayest combination of colours is seen in a striking two-piece ensemble which feels like wool, but is actually cotton. Bayndero stripes and knitted waist-band. Original! Very! And a surefire stimulant for jaded spirits. In the department of formal frocks, — knock years off your age with an appealing black taffeta that boasts a ruffled petticoat and hooped skirt. Plum red provides an effective contrast, and is used to fashion the petticoat ruffles and bows which trim the neck and sleeves.

The only tube tester which can efficiently test all makes of radio tubes in the Colony, may be run to earth in the VICTORIA RADIO SHOPPE, Hankow Road, Kowloon. It is only one small point to prove what we have already said before—that this shop is the most complete and up-to-date servicing station in town. No matter what the make of your radio, they claim they can fix it—a claim which any one of their satisfied clients will willingly bear out. And besides repairing radios, the VICTORIA RADIO SHOPPE also sell them. Right now, they have in stock a group of Zenith models. (Right local reception only) which will make the ideal Christmas gift for the young son or daughter in your family. These sets come in many attractive colours, and solves the question of an inexpensive gift with an expensive look about it. The 1938 editions of the Telefunken are also in, and the VICTORIA RADIO SHOPPE invite your inspection.

If you want something new in the way of a powder compact, you might look up the tempting collection at ELITE STYLES in Queen's Road. They have a whole new range of those gold mesh powder boxes which make it so hard for a gal to resist the urge to powder her nose in public. You'll go mad about those embossed with polio-point, and stock up on at least one dainty flower sprays, painted on coloured glass. There is a "Good Luck" wherever you go, and don't overlook a perfect "pet" among the novelty leather ones. You recognize it by the travellers labels covering its face. In red and black, with plenty of saucy good looks. Gloves—laced or tied with leather bows; embroidered with soutache or handcut with pretty wristlets are among other exciting finds. Your choice of this season's winning colours in suede, kid, chamamois and other leathers. Delicious are the two-colour ones with black top and red palm!

We daresay you've heard some member of the family or an intimate friend express the wish for a better camera than the one he or she has. If so, then this Voigtlander Bessa Rangefinder you see so many people using nowadays is the very camera they ought to have. Accurate photography with this model is almost automatic and it's difficult not to get good pictures with the Range finder Bessa. Everything has been designed to help you secure better pictures. What we liked about this camera when we examined it was the way in which you could focus exactly on a subject, and you can get such a good grip while taking a picture that all fear of shakiness is banished. The trigger release under the baseboard, which only appears when the camera is open, is another great help. As for the pictures, you have a choice of two sizes. You can either take 8 at 2 1/4" x 3 1/4" or 16 half that size, so it becomes an economical business to own this model too.

All kinds of feminine frivolities may now be found in THE LINEN CHEST, 210 Gloucester Building. We refer you first to a new type of nightie with sculptured fit, which seems to us an achievement of the proper kind for that subtle flattery we all demand, even in our bed-time clothes. Exquisite scroll embroidery, after the manner of the French, is used to decorate bodices. The bust is molded and the rest is just a symphony in line. A negligee which invites unexpected callers is cut on the Princess, and masses of floral sprays, applied from Alencon lace, form a pretty impressive decoration. These underthings are fashioned with such a sure feminine flair for good taste that you're bound to want a complete under-wardrobe.

Have you noticed with what irritating frequency children are apt to catch cold in all weathers? What's a mere cold after all, you say. A trifle, perhaps, but it is answerable for many illnesses. For instance, it induces or contributes to pneumonia, bronchitis, pulmonary tuberculosis, and several other maladies of a serious character. You see, a sudden chill impairs vitality and renders the victim susceptible to disease. Generally, put that way it sounds a little more serious, doesn't it? So if we were you and had any kiddies to mind, we'd guard sedulously against colds by keeping a bottle of WATSON'S NO. 36 COUGH SYRUP in the house. After all, an ounce of prevention is worth a tone of cure, so if you've got 20 cents to spare, invest it in a bottle of WATSON'S NO. 36 COUGH SYRUP for children to-day . . . sorry we mean to-morrow, when WATSON'S open for business in the usual way.

There's something happy about the woollen jumpers and cardigans at DOLLY VARDEN'S and it's a source to know that you can find the famous stamp of Morley's among these which start from about $10. Real Cashmere is also to be had, and in the family discover the neatest bottle green jumper in ribbed knit, and team it up with any one of your smartest, town suits. Or you might someday dispense with the jacket of your suit and slip on a cream coloured waistcoat which, unlike most waistcoats we know, has long sleeves and fancy button trimmings. There are plain coloured ones (but not unbecomingly so) and striped ones, in streamlines or fancy knits. There is also a combination of both in lay patterns which appear unexpectedly in jumpers that are otherwise strictly "tailored." No hint of the vicar's daughter about them, and the perfect solution to take the place of blouses on raw days.

Comfortable shoes should be the aim of every woman who values her good looks, for it is an honest-to-goodness fact that ill-fitting shoes are responsible for many a drawn and tired expression on the faces of otherwise attractive women. Bally's shoes are known the world over for the comfort they give, and in the Ladies Salon of LANE, CRAWFORD'S you can now choose from a whole new range of attractive styles. There is the sports Oxford, as neat in design as a tailor-made frock, and as flexible as an old felt hat. There is the town shoe with one strap which will make your feet itch to be in them the livelong day. There is the street pump, a trim shoe which admirably bridges the gap between the formal and informal. Your choice of brown or black, in suede with contrasting leathers.

For the women who have very definite ideas about a frock being just so, and who are never quite satisfied with the custom-made frocks offered without a thought to individual flattery—there is a clever little shop in Kowloon, a few doors from the Star Theatre, which will suit your requirements down to the ground. We direct you to JOAN'S, a lively young firm where dresses which are very much a part of your personality can be made to measure for the mere price of a song. These clever dressmakers established themselves primarily for the purpose of individual orders—executed as you expect them to be—and they pay a good deal of attention to line and the finishing off of seams. They can also offer you ready-made American frocks in styles that show good taste in their selection. From about $30, which is pretty amazing for the price.

In circles where pedigreed furs is the main topic of conversation, the name of Klebanoff is pronounced with due respect. For many years the owner of the Siberian Fur Store in Shanghai, he is well known as the furrier who can generally be counted upon to provide "the real thing." Naturally we felt as happy as a circus when it became known that Klebanoff has entered into a contract with MME DORRY'S, and that his first consignment of furs has already reached this salon. Luxurious coats in Mink, Ermine, Squirrel, Kolinsky and other lyric furs are now waiting your approval, including caps and stoles in silver and red fox. The highest quality at moderate prices is assured, and all of this season's most popular styles. You'll find MME DORRY'S on the Mezzanine Floor of Marina House, 16-19 Queen's Road, Central.

Mix or match your shoes to your gowns Black, Brown, Blue, Wine, Green.

We have them for you to see. And Hosiery that will give you service.

The Secret Of Kemal Ataturk

By COUNT SFORZA

A victorious general, founder of a State, Head of this State from the day of its foundation to the end of his own life, having constantly enjoyed the absolute confidence of his subjects, what an exceptional career.

These facts are of course common knowledge; but the case of Kemal Ataturk is in reality still more extraordinary. It is the sole of its kind in history. Kemal remains the only dictator who, having initiated his work, having pursued it in peace, having placed it on a solid basis, dies in his bed at the summit of his glory and his power, accompanied by the sincere regret of the whole Turkish people. The careers of a Cromwell, of a Washington, of a Bonaparte, of a Cavour, of a Bismarck are merely episodic in comparison. What was the secret of Kemal's success? But history is always a complicated business, and before explaining what was, to my, the original and essential cause of the exceptional triumph of Kemal Ataturk, it is necessary to recall the factors which helped the Turkish hero in his undertaking.

TURKEY'S AWAKENING

The awakening of a Turkish patriotism in the place of the old Moslem loyalty coincided with the beginnings of Kemal's political fortune and was almost automatically identified with his work. The Ottoman Empire—whatever may be said of it in present-day Germany—had nothing in common with a national State. It was only in the nineteenth century—after Greece, Serbia, Bulgaria and Rumania had successively freed themselves from the domination of the Porte—that Turkish Anatolia began to become the centre of the Empire. At the beginning of the twentieth century, literature entered the field; a campaign for a "purely Turkish language" was initiated at Salonica; by a Turk of Djabekir, Zia. Kemal was at that time studying in that city. Zia launched the idea of a Turkish translation of the Koran and composed passionate appeals for the banning of Arabic inscriptions from the walls of the Mosques. As a very young diplomat, I happened to be in Turkey at that time and, when later, I became well acquainted with Kemal I was surprised to hear him say that this movement—which in 1904 and 1905 may have appeared diabolical—had aroused his youthful enthusiasm.

WILSON'S WORST

When Wilson, in May 1919, made what was perhaps his worst mistake in agreement with Lloyd George and Clemenceau, by allowing the Greeks to take possession of Smyrna, it was young Kemal—whose exploits against the Anglo-French arms in the Dardanelles had made him popular—who decided what no one at Stamboul then dared even to think, namely that Turkey should oppose the Greeks and, if necessary, the Entente itself. A born speaker, he made a speech in the Samsoun Mosque calling the Turkish people to the rescue; a week later, with that mysterious propensity of news for travelling common to Moslem countries, his speech was repeated by heart in all Turkish mosques.

SAFE DIET FOR GASTRIC ULCERS

Great care is needed in the feeding of sufferers from gastric and duodenal ulcers and inflammation of the stomach. The wrong kind of food will increase the pain and discomfort. In the early stages of treatment small quantities of liquid food must be taken at frequent intervals. But strength must be maintained; the body must be kept nourished. That is why doctors and nurses recommend Horlicks as an ideal food for patients suffering from gastric ulcers and all inflamed conditions of the stomach. Horlicks contains the essential elements of nourishment. It is pleasant to take. It builds up energy, restores vitality, without irritating even the most sensitive stomach. It gives you strength to combat a long illness, and shortens convalescence. Get Horlicks to-day.

In these difficult times of anxiety and worry, the task of carrying on and doing work which must be done is a doubly difficult one which must tend to exhaust one's nervous energy. Horlicks builds up strength, vitality and prevents that listlessness and tiredness caused by constant nervous strain. H. M. Hodges, 406-408 Asia Life Building, Queen's Road, Hong Kong.

As Count Sforza is the only European statesman who has known President Ataturk intimately, we have asked him to describe his reminiscences of the founder of New Turkey. As a matter of fact, it was Count Sforza who, in 1919, saved Kemal from being deported. The interest of this article is all the greater at a moment of increased agitation throughout the Arab race, for Count Sforza is able for the first time to disclose to the public what Ataturk's ideas were with regard to the relations to be entertained by Turkey with the Arabs.

"YOUNG REBEL"

At Constantinople where I was High Commissioner for Italy, the Grand Vizir said to me: "I know that you are a friend of Kemal, but he is mad, he must be saved. The Sultan is about to order him to return; when he comes back, will you allow him to travel in Italy?" I replied: "He will not come back." And in poor Damad Ferid's eyes there was a conflict of terror and admiration. I was convinced from that moment that no Turk would oppose the young rebel. I was right. The stronger Kemal's bands became in Anatolia, the more numerous the Turks who flocked to his banner.

Kemal's triumph, the military defeat of the Greeks and the diplomatic defeat of the Entente belong henceforth to the history of Europe. They would fill a book and exceed the scope of an article. So I will endeavour to confine myself to showing what was, in my opinion, the secret of Kemal's lasting success—the only kind that counts. This is well worth doing, for it is thus possible to grasp the profound difference of method between Kemal's and that of the other post-war dictators. Dictators are in general doomed to disaster because they feel obliged to pursue a policy of prestige and bluff. Kemal alone had the force to proclaim from the outset of his rule that he renounced all claims to the former Arabian territories of the Empire; and what was still better, he kept his word.

CAUSE OF DECLINE

My conversations with Kemal concerning the Arabs of Cyrenaica are one of my most interesting souvenirs from the psychological standpoint. As High Commissioner at Constantinople I was negotiating with the Chief of the Senussis, who had taken refuge at Broussa pending his return to Libya; I allowed him to expect a wide measure of independence if he loyally accepted Italian suzerainty. Ahmed el Senussi was prepared to submit. His brotherhood is so powerful in the Moslem world that I wished to be sure that Kemal would not put obstacles in my way. Kemal replied: "Do what you like; I am delighted that your negotiations are so successful; I wish to hear no more of the Arabs; the maintenance of the Turkish domination over the Arabs was one of the causes of our decline."

And later, when he had become all-powerful in Turkey, he did not change his opinion. But efforts to make him to do so were not lacking.

KEMAL'S GREATNESS

The Ottoman Empire, with its Khalifate, had claimed to pursue a world policy which for a long time has been a veritable anachronism. Kemal, who had decided to become and remain master of his own house, in Turkey, realised that the best method to guarantee the complete independence of his country was no longer to intervene in intrigues outside his frontiers. The merit of this descendant of a race of conquerors was all the greater to have grasped what certain European Heads of States have not yet understood: that territorial gains are not always an advantage, far from it; that some of them bring a State to disaster in the long run. Kemal's greatness was largely due to his realization of this fundamental truth: that Imperial Turkey was a backward country, whose fate swayed in the balance between Asia and Europe; and that a Republican Turkey might, by becoming an essential Anatolian Power, be transformed in its turn into a factor of progress and into a piece of the first rank on the chessboard of Asia.

GROWING PRESTIGE

How many times when travelling in Asia have I remarked the growing prestige of New Turkey among those of the capitals and also among the humble denizens of the villages . . . All this was Kemal's work and Kemal's alone. For the first time perhaps, the inhabitants of the remotest territories of the old continent admired the reformer a thousand times more than the conqueror.

There is an outer trait which may serve to mark the deepening difference between the dictatorship of Kemal Ataturk and the other post-war dictatorships. The Turks were grateful to Kemal for having scrupulously maintained all the outer forms of a democracy. Those who have lived for long in the East, even in Abdul Hamid's times—and this Sultan had concentrated all the power in his own hands—know that equality from man to man is one of the essential features of the Turkish character. I can yet hear the Grand Vizir Ferid Pasha in the pergola of his garden at Kassim Pacha, when in 1909, he told me the story of a Koniah peasant, who had arrived at the seraglio in Stamboul to appeal to the Sultan. Coming to the Divan where the latter was seated with his Vizirs, he simply asked: "Khaghiniz Khunkar?" (Which of you is the Great Lord?)

SURE INSTINCT

The Turks—even the most individualist and progressive—felt with that sure instinct common to Asiatics—that the object of Kemal Ataturk's dictatorship was to eliminate for ever the danger of an Eastern autocracy in a nation which he had raised to a new life. He himself said the last time I saw him: "My dictatorship has but one object; to bar the way to any new dictatorship in Turkey."

This would have been a paradox in Western Europe. But on the shores of the Bosphorus, it is different.

Convinced as I am of the necessity for peoples to work out their own salvation, I felt quite definitely that, from Kemal's lips, this was not a mere effort for wit; what he said was the fervent expression of what he thought and wished.

X-Ray confirms OF GASTRIC ULCERS!

Perhaps your stomach trouble is not so serious as that of Mr. H. J. George, whose letter appears below. All the better, because then you can be doubly sure that the remedy that brought him relief will give you freedom also. Mr. George's letter shows how Maclean Brand Stomach Powder is as effective in healing as it is in protecting the stomach and preventing further trouble.

A different man in 24 hours

"I have proved what a marvellous cure your Stomach Powder is, twelve months ago, after suffering for 15 years, and having had three operations for gastric ulcers in hospital."

"After taking your wonderful powder, I felt a different man in the first 24 hours, and am now keeping quite fit."

"When I told the specialist he said: 'Very good, and keep on with it and I will X-ray later and tell you what I think about it.' This was done later, and he tells me it has made a complete cure; thanks to Maclean Brand Stomach Powder. That is why I am so pleased to pass it on to anyone with the same trouble. You may make any use you like of this letter, as I can prove every word." H. J. GEORGE.

This intense desire to help other sufferers to get the same relief is characteristic of all who have written of their experiences with Maclean Brand Stomach Powder.

How Maclean Brand Stomach Powder removes pain

Thousands of sufferers have been set free from a life of pain by Maclean Brand Stomach Powder. Pain comes from pressure, the pressure of wind or gas in the stomach which is caused by fermenting matter. If you take Maclean Brand Stomach Powder nothing impure can remain in the stomach—it removes the pain because it removes the cause.

It neutralises the acid that eats into the stomach wall and repairs the damage by putting a protective coating over the delicate parts.

CHINESE HOSPITAL CONDITIONS

During inspections of the Chinese hospital it is not at all an uncommon thing—aggravated, no doubt, by the influx of indigent refugees from areas affected by the Sino-Japanese hostilities—to see two patients, old and young, in the same bed, five adult women in two beds pushed close together, patients lying all over the ward floor so as to render separation of types of disease and medical attention and nursing a matter of extreme difficulty.

One particularly bad example of overcrowding noted was sixty-one patients occupying a ward holding twelve beds.

This disgusting state of affairs is recorded partly to point to the need for urgent reform of the system and for the provision of a sufficiency of institutions of different types to meet the needs of the poorest elements in the population, and partly in the hope and belief that, with the close cooperation of the Tung Wah Committee the Secretariat for Chinese Affairs (whose officers show such great devotion to the interests of the Chinese community), the Medical Department and with financial support from Government, the dawn of a new era in the care of the sick poor is breaking.—Extract from report of Medical Department for 1937.

NEW CAR SOON TO BE HERE

Mr. Edsel Ford, President of the Ford Motor Company, has announced that a new car, bearing its own distinctive name, and selling the lower medium-price range, would be added to the Ford-Lincoln line shortly before the New York Automobile Show.

The new car will be known as the Mercury 8. It will have a wheelbase of 116", a V-8 engine more powerful than any hitherto marketed by the Ford Company; hydraulic brakes and numerous advanced mechanical features.

ITALY BANS MICKEY MOUSE

Rome Yesterday. Italian children will be deprived shortly of Mickey Mouse, Popeye the Sailor, and other foreign comic strips.

Dr. Casini, chief of the Press section of the Ministry of Popular Culture, announced at Bologna to-day the Ministry's decision that in future children's literature must be absolutely racially Italian and its level raised by the tone of the Imperial Fascist and Mussolinian age in which they will live.

In accordance with the decision to exclude the foreign comic strips, all papers are to be revised immediately.

CONDOR'S FLIGHT TO FAR EAST PART OF EXPERIMENT

Berlin, Yesterday. Although the flight of Germany's outstanding plane, the Condor, to Japan, is in the nature of a spectacular enterprise, insofar as it is hoped to complete the journey of 9,300 miles in 50 hours, it is, at the same time, experimental in the sense that a test will be made over a route which will ultimately become an all-round-the-world route.

The route to the Far East is well found and organised, although its maximum potentialities as to speed have not yet been given a thorough test by a commercial plane.

This the Condor will provide. Plans are for departure tomorrow (Monday) arrival at Hanoi early on Wednesday and a straight flight to Tokyo (passing near Hong Kong on Wednesday morning).

The projected round-the-world route, supposing it started from Berlin, would run as follows: Berlin - Bagdad - Allahabad - Calcutta - Hong Kong - Manila - Guam - Midway - Honolulu - San Francisco - New York - Horta (Azores) - Lisbon - Berlin. This route is almost identical with the round-the-world record route, recognised officially by the Federation Aeronautic Internationale, but which has never yet been flown.

NO SHORT CUTS

In their record flight round the world, the Americans made a short cut via Siberia, thus totalling only 23,000 kilometres, instead of 39,000 kilometres of the former route.

Weather causes the Atlantic to be still the "missing link." The Pacific, despite occasional typhoons, is not as dangerous as the Atlantic. The former has numerous islands, where planes can land, and under normal conditions, its waters are smoother than those of the Atlantic, where risks are far more frequent. Not only do violent hurricanes sweep the Atlantic, but high waves are so frequent that a landing would be perilous. Last year when American planes carried out experimental flights, a plane was kept on Horta (Azores) for five weeks before being able to take off!

ATLANTIC CROSSINGS
Endeavouring to avoid these risks, the German Luftwaffe, using air—and not sea—planes, has made use of catapult ships on the Northern Atlantic, two of them, the "Schwabensland" and the "Friesland" being permanently stationed. From these ships, planes are catapulted into the air, making them independent of the sea. These ships will only be abandoned if recent non-stop flight, experiments as carried out by the "Condor" prove reasonably safe.

It is still not certain what part Zeppelins will play in future North-Atlantic flights. The Zeppelin requires more time for a crossing than the plane, but affords greater personal convenience for passengers and has greater possibilities of avoiding possible sources of danger.

Possibly, therefore, the Zeppelin will constitute the "missing link" in round-the-world flight.

The new Zeppelin, L. Z. 130, recently completed, has been named "Graf Zeppelin," thus perpetuating the name of the most successful dirigible in history.—Trans-Ocean.

Six-Point Method Of Negotiation

London, Yesterday.

The new contacts which France has established with Italy in the last few days have not so far proved very satisfactory.

It is apparent to the French representatives in Rome that the line of general conduct adopted by the Rome-Berlin axis at Hitler's express desire is this:

"Italy will make no agreement with France or begin to make any decisive decision without the consent of Germany."

In other words, Germany reserves the right to control Italy's attitude from day to day.

Those around Mussolini believe that Italy's demands are so heavy that France will never be able to accept them without suffering a defeat worse than at Munich.

Hitler told Mussolini to force France to make six "preliminary concessions" before entering into negotiations.

THE SIX POINTS

These "preliminary concessions" are dominated by the first, which concerns the Mediterranean.

1. Italy wants France to recognise Italy's supremacy in the Mediterranean, because France has three seas on her frontiers, and Italy is solely a Mediterranean Power.

2. Italy requires a guarantee of the permanence of French policy. Italy, mindful of her experience of the Hoare-Laval agreement, must feel sure that a Government which includes the enemies of Fascism will not destroy the work of the Daadier-Bonnet cabinet.

Henceforth, we are informed, this claim is to be made general in all dealings between Dictator States and other Powers.

It appears that Mussolini personally is going to draw up a list of French politicians and diplomats with whom he does not wish to negotiate.

3. The next preliminary is to be an "instruction" to the French Press to refrain from attacks on the Dictators.

4. Then, of course, Mussolini will demand a modification of the Franco-Soviet Pact.

It should be noticed that in the course of the recent commercial negotiations between Italy and Russia it was made known to the Soviet representatives that should a denunciation of the Pact come from Russia herself she would at once receive favoured treatment in Rome.

5. Italy wishes to prevent France from catching up on the time she has lost in rearmament. Ciano will impress on M. Poincaré that it is not worth while for France to spend huge sums on rearmament as Italy is now France's friend.

6. Mussolini's final demand concerns the settlement of the colonial question.

Germany has instructed Italy to support her colonial claims.

The French Ambassador will without a doubt hear in Rome time and again that the best and surest basis for friendship between France and Italy would be the restitution to Germany of French Togoland and the French Cameroons.

SHOWING GOOD-WILL

Italy finds herself with a double advantage as a result of following this six-point method of negotiation suggested to her by Germany.

Firstly, she is doing Germany a great favour which will be returned. Secondly, she is showing her good will to the whole world.

If France concedes the six demands she must be prepared to expect further and even more unreasonable claims by Italy. "Demand much" is the motto of the Rome-Berlin axis.

As can be seen, therefore, the new contacts between France and Italy are not very encouraging. They are a further manifestation of the extent of the defeat which France sustained at Munich.

And therein lies an explanation of France's great interest in recent speeches in the House of Commons, particularly that of Mr. Anthony Eden.

Certain French people agree with him, especially in his judgment that France, instead of

COLONY'S VITAL STATISTICS

Births registered in Hong Kong during 1937 showed an increase from 27,383 (530 Non-Chinese) in 1936 to 32,303 (692 Non-Chinese). The crude, uncorrected birth-rate for 1937 is calculated as 32.1 per thousand of the mid-year population. This compares with a rate of 27.8 for the previous year. Some 34,635 deaths were registered in 1937 amongst the civilian population, an increase of 9,255 over the figure for 1936. It is significant that the monthly average of deaths for the first seven months of the year was 2,349, whereas the monthly average for the last five months was 3,638—the refugee problem and typhoon being large, accountable. The crude, uncorrected death-rate for the civilian population is estimated at 34.4 per thousand living, the corresponding figure for 1936 being 25.8.

The Economic Consequences Of Munich

A discussion of the Munich agreement must to a great extent be coloured by one's conception of the ultimate aims of Herr Hitler. There are simple people who really believe the whole trouble arose out of Herr Hitler's burning sympathy for the Sudeten Germans, and that now that this grievance has been removed the German Reich will pursue a policy of peace. No doubt these same simpletons were equally optimistic when the Rheinland was entered and when the Anschluss was effected.

Those who take a more realistic view recognise that the dismemberment of Czechoslovakia and its practical absorption into the German orbit was due to the fact that it stood in the way of Nazi ambitions. Czechoslovakia as a democracy was a pointed contrast to totalitarian intolerance. She was equally an awkward obstacle to the accomplishment of the far-reaching strategic plans designed to strengthen the power of Germany. The political consequences of the defeat of the Western democracies have been examined in great detail. Everyone can see how the balance of power has been tilted in favour of the Berlin-Rome axis, or rather in favour of the senior partner, whose existing predominance has been greatly emphasised. The menace to all the remaining democracies in Europe has been duly appreciated. More tardily people are becoming aware of the economic consequences of the events of the past few weeks.

goods, and the products of the metal industries. It is unlikely that Germany, having obtained a stranglehold over the remains of the Czechoslovak state will allow this market to be entered by any but her own products. Indeed she has now robbed the Czechs of so much of their industry that they will be in no position to resist. The export trade of Great Britain the Continent of Europe, will be regarded in much the same way as were the black and brown peoples in the old days of colonial exploitation.

The Nazi policy is in fact imperialistic. Europe is to be the seat of German hegemony. No doubt in due course this imperialism will spread beyond the bounds of Europe. The rulers of Germany will find that in addition to Hungarian wheat and Rumanian oil they require rubber and other tropical products.

Increasing Severance

Here then is the gravest consequence of what has happened in Europe. Instead of any breaking down of the barriers between nations, there will be an increasing severance into economic compartments based not on the demands of peace but on the needs of war. Instead of a general raising of the standard of the economically backward parts of Europe there will be exploitation in the interests of the Nazi state. From the point of view of the Western democracies the situation is sufficiently serious, as Nazi Germany will have possessed herself of economic resources far greater than those which carried her through four years of war. The immediate effect of the Agreement has been to hand over about $180 millions worth of fortifications, factories, buildings, roads, railways and mines to Germany. But we cannot seriously limit Germany's gains to the actual territory she obtained in the Sudeten regions. The total resources of the former Czechoslovak state may now be said to be at Germany's disposal, and these amount to somewhere in the neighbourhood of one third of the total resources of Germany before the Anschluss with Austria. These are only the first fruits of the Munich surrender. It is scarcely possible to exaggerate the effect of Munich upon the economic structure of Europe.

Hitler's Intentions

Here again it is necessary to be clear as to Herr Hitler's intentions. It would cause no dismay to any reasonable person if the great industrial resources of Germany were to find a market in Central and South East Europe. The undeveloped and backward agricultural regions would form a natural complement to a high developed industrial community. An exchange of goods and products between Germany and these countries would make for the raising of the standard of life throughout Europe. There is ample room for the disposal of the products of Germany's heavy industry in equipping the more backward parts of Europe with the things required by a modern community.

Reich On War Basis

The position is however very different when one realises that the German Reich is organised on a war basis, and is directed by men who think in terms of war. They realise that within the bounds of Germany there are not the resources necessary for making her economically self-sufficient. Czechoslovakia as an economic unit stood in the way of the German plan for bringing under German control and exploitation the resources in metals, oil, food and other commodities of the countries of South Eastern Europe. South Eastern Europe is in fact to become colonial territory. The process is already well advanced. By a series of agreements country after country is being brought into a closed economic system. In course of time the countries outside the ring will be excluded altogether from these markets. Britain and France will have to look elsewhere.

By Mr. C.R. ATTLEE Leader Of The Opposition In The House Of Commons to Czechoslovakia, which amounts to nearly five hundred million Crowns a year, will dry up. The same will happen with the trade which the Dominions and India have done with Czechoslovakia.

Monopoly In South-East

The result of Munich will in brief be that German goods will obtain a monopoly in South Eastern Europe and the food and raw materials possessed by these countries will go to strengthen the German war potential. With this economic penetration will go political influence. This will be directed, we may be sure, not in the interest of the masses of the people and certainly not in the interests of the races which Nazi political philosophy holds to be inferior to the German. The other races of

Percentage Play

THE often mentioned but seldom understood law of averages is not immutable, as is the law of gravity, for example. If just one apple were to fall upward from a tree we might well prepare for the sudden disintegration of our universe. "Probabilities" upon which are based our knowledge of "percentages" do not work along such narrow lines. It is by no means impossible for a coin tossed into the air to fall heads twenty times in a row. Such an event, however, is so rare that any individual who wagers even money on its occurrence should be locked up for observation. To a lesser degree this also applies to the bridge player who selects a line of play that has one chance, instead of another line that has three or four chances. Consider the "percentage" play involved in the following hand:

The bidding was identical at seven tables in a recent duplicate game, and in every case West opened the fourth best spade. Some declarators went up with dummy's declarators went up with dummy's queen, others let the lead ride to the A-10. But since East had both the king and jack, this was imponderable. South lost his only spade stopper immediately. With the

Yugo-Slovia Relapse

A recent message from the Times Danubian correspondent makes this abundantly clear. Writing from Belgrade he said that all opposition to Doctor Stoyadinovitch has collapsed overnight. This opposition had taken as its slogan, "Back to France, England and the Little Entente." That cry is no longer heard in Belgrade. The German Minister of Economics is making abundant use of this new orientation of feeling in Yugoslavia. His recent tour may well result in the diversion of the greater part of Yugoslav foreign trade to Germany. Already, according to Doctor Funk himself, Germany can absorb one half of the entire production of Yugoslavia, and can guarantee all the countries of South Eastern Europe a price for their agricultural products. If she is willing to do this it may be assumed that she will insist on every one of these countries taking German goods in exchange. Last year Britain exported $21,929,500 worth of goods to Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Yugoslavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Rumania and Turkey. These goods included textiles, machinery and coal. It is doubtful if anything more than a minute proportion of this trade will remain after Germany, strengthened by her great victory at Munich, has forced the countries of South Eastern Europe to accept her terms for an economic agreement.

British Trade Loss

How serious this will be to Britain may be illustrated in another way by glancing at British trade with Czechoslovakia alone. The biggest item in British exports to that country are woollens, cotton

No Half Measures

AS the Rt. Hon. Mr. A. Duff Cooper, until recently First Lord of the Admiralty, points out in his analysis on Page Three of the grave problems facing Great Britain, very real misgivings continue to be felt in England concerning the policy of the Government.

The present temper of the country, judged by public speeches of sincere men and the recorded votes in by-elections, is such that it cannot be misunderstood. There is discontent not because of the strong measures taken by the Cabinet to remedy the weaknesses revealed by the September crisis, but because the steps taken are regarded as half-measures.

Sir John Anderson, the new "Minister for Civilian Defence" is expected to introduce a Bill next week bringing the National Register into operation, and in the official intimation, special care is taken once again to stress that there will be no provision for compulsion. This is the very attitude which is so largely deplored. It is not conscription for Army, Navy or Air Force which is regarded as essential. But public opinion is perfectly ready for the immediate setting up of a National Register covering the whole country, and not merely those who voluntarily sign the allotted form.

As it is essential that, on the outbreak of war, everyone should be prepared to step into his proper place in the scheme of defence, active or passive, it is equally essential that they should receive prior training.

Otherwise, it has frequently been pointed out in England, as in Hong Kong in connection with Volunteering, A.R.P., St. John Ambulance activities, and the Nursing Detachment, H.K.V.D.C., when the emergency arrives, there will be a last-minute rush of untrained individuals vague as to what they can do, who will add to the confusion, instead of fitting neatly into an organised system.

There is no reason to suppose that any individual in Britain or any part of the Empire would decline any reasonable demands made upon him for the better protection of himself and his kin, and why the Chamberlain Government refuses to accept the fact and capitalise on it passes all understanding.

LESSONS OF BLACK-OUT

IT is with good reason, in many respects, that Wing-Commander Steele-Perkins, the Colony's A.R.P. Officer, has complained of lack of public co-operation in the black-out tests made this week. When compared with previous experiments, the black-outs suggested that the Colony's efficiency had seriously deteriorated.

What is questioned in many quarters is whether this was altogether the fault of the community. The complaint is made that Government apparently expects a sheeplike obedience to instructions printed in English and Chinese, which many are unable to read with understanding at all, and relies upon such instructions in lieu of proper signals.

During Friday's test, for instance, there was complete haziness as to when the blackout had been completed. When street lights were switched on to mark the commencement of the second phase many residents themselves switched on, and totally ignored the second phase. At the end of the second phase, there was no "All Clear" signal to mark the end of the practice. Those who desired to restore normal lighting took their cue from what was happening elsewhere.

The suggestion is that if black-out tests are made they should be carried out from beginning to end under such conditions as would rule during an emergency, when a system of alarm, urgent alarm, and all clear, would have, necessarily, to be devised. If such a system were now organised, the meanings of signals made perfectly clear by organised propaganda, and "tests" made under such new conditions, it well might be found that black-out failures would cease to be source of official concern.

In what it is hoped is purely a temporary phase, the war has been brought uncomfortably close to the British border.

The Japanese commenced a mopping-up programme in the territory immediately north of the frontier on Wednesday and yesterday shrapnel was actually falling on the Hong Kong side of the Shumshun River. The Japanese have given assurance that everything will be done to avoid untoward incidents, but the presence of Japanese troops lining the Chinese side must be a matter of deep concern to the Colony, if only for the reason that its effect has been to cause an "invasion" of thousands of destitutes, fleeing from a terror built on authenticated stories of Japanese atrocities. Chinese opposition at many points has been staunch, but ineffective against vastly superior weapons.

Announcing the campaign, the Japanese Commander requested British "co-operation" to avoid unnecessary incidents. British attempts to establish safety zones on the Chinese side of the border experienced results seemingly suggesting that the co-operation was to be unilateral. At all events, a request for recognition of the proposed zones was sent to Tokyo on Wednesday, and yesterday morning, by which time it was far too late, no reply had been received.

In the meantime, there is growing restiveness concerning Japanese refusal to restore international shipping privileges on the Yangtze. Mr. Cordell Hull, in a restrained comment, left no doubt of America's attitude of displeasure at the nature and tone of the Japanese reply to his Note on this and parallel subjects, while Sir Robert Craigie spent an hour and a half with Mr. Arita explaining the depth of British dissatisfaction.

On the more important fronts in China, little change has occurred. The disastrous fire at Changsha was revealed as a calamitous exhibition of funk by the Chinese military leaders in the Hunan provincial capital, and such fighting as has occurred north and east have ended the predictions that Changsha would be occupied "within a week." North of Canton and along the West River in Kwangtung, the real situation remains obscure. Prospects of a serious attempt by the Chinese to recapture Canton have sensibly diminished with the arrival of between 40,000 and 60,000 Japanese reinforcements. Inasmuch as the strength of the South China Expeditionary Force has been increased by such numbers, the Chinese counter-offensive threat may be said to have achieved valuable results. In a war of economic attrition, it is an important gain.

In Germany, measures against the Jews heaped themselves one upon the other and the problem of arranging for mass immigration, sooner or later, can hardly be avoided. The Prime Minister made certain promises, regarding Tanganyika, British Guiana, and other parts of the Empire, in his statement on Monday, but much more is required. In the meantime, bitterness and hostility aroused by the anti-Jewish violence, tends to increase, and the American demand for a trade embargo on Germany is but symptomatic.

As to Palestine, the case for the British Government could hardly have been put more happily than it was by Mr. Malcolm MacDonald in the Parliamentary debate on Wednesday. Whether or not it was so intended, the speech contained a powerfully reasoned appeal to both Arabs and Jews to reconsider the position in a spirit of sweet reasonableness. Mr. MacDonald did not gloss over the errors of the administration, but put the problem as it is to-day in terms convincing and encouraging. Mr. MacDonald richly deserves to succeed in the most difficult task now confronting the Colonial Office.

France chose the visit of the British statesmen for announcement of virtual conclusion of a Franco-German No-War Declaration and for the development of the most serious internal crisis for many months. Little is known regarding the decisions reached in the Daladier-Chamberlain talks, but the British Premier was able to describe them as "useful to both." It seems very unlikely, however, that M. Daladier will long last to carry the results to the further stages contemplated. Not that it vitally matters. No Government in the British or France can visualise the future with equanimity which does not provide for the closest co-operation in every sphere between the two countries.

SCRUTATOR.

Battle Of Ideas: by Geoffrey Trease What's Wrong With The Provinces?

WHAT'S wrong with the Provinces? Or—not to beg the question—is "something" wrong with the Provinces?

London may have been the goal of the young and ambitious since the time of Dick Whittington, but never has it dominated national life to the extent it does to-day.

I don't mean only in the administrative or the economic sphere. This isn't another A.R.P. article about the over-centralisation of key factories and distributive centres. It's a consideration (for a change) of human values.

The vast majority of the younger people to-day believe, rightly or wrongly, that life in London is preferable to life in the Provinces. Every year sees the metropolis engulf another host of young men and women in its maw.

I speak as an unashamed Provincial. I have yielded, like others, to the lure of London for a time. But I have broken the spell and gone back to the Provinces.

Since then, I have known life in an East Coast holiday town, in a fashionable inland spa, in a West Country village, a Berkshire market town, and a great manufacturing city in the Midlands. And I think I know now, better than ever before, why all the liveliest spirits of my generation flee to London. London, with all its faults, has life. Over the Provinces lies the pall of intellectual death.

That statement may bring indignant retorts. Let me hasten to pay tribute to all those provincial Labour Parties, Left Book Club groups, W.E.A. classes, and other organisations which may lead to "rebut my charge. Yet though this can spend one's leisure as intelligently in a provincial city as in London, the point is, one cannot earn one's living.

There was a time when cities like Norwich were centres of intellectual activity, and when books of universal interest might be published as well there, or in Bristol, or some other town, as in London. To-day, it is true, there are 40 or 50 publishers listed who have their head offices in the Provinces—but there are only one or two who can attempt to compete on a national scale. Even the Oxford University Press has gone to London. Anyone who wishes to enter publishing seriously, must go to London.

So too, increasingly, with journalism. Provincial newspapers are in a sad decline. They are no longer the nursery of Fleet-street. Were James Barrie starting his career to-day, he would be ill-advised to enter a Nottingham newspaper office. Nor would Richard Jefferies find much encouragement to write Nature articles for a Wiltshire county weekly. Syndicated articles have closed another door in the Provinces.

What is the effect upon the lives of ordinary people in the Provinces? It means that their circle of day-to-day acquaintances can hardly ever include men and women concerned with writing, publishing, films, broadcasting, and so forth.

You may easily retort—cheaply, I think—"So what?" I am well aware that, as a creative worker myself, I attach a special value to the companionship of my own kind. But for life to be interesting anywhere, the community should represent a well-balanced diversity of types and occupations.

If certain provincial centres are from time to time accused of philistinism in connection with music or the other arts, they have every right to reply that, each year, all those of their young citizens who care actively and creatively about such things are drained away to the one place which offers them the slightest opportunity.

This is all very true, you may say, but Britain is a small island. Bristol and Norwich lost their cultural position inevitably when the railway supplanted the stage-coach. And in a few years, with the development of civil aviation, Glasgow and Edinburgh will lose such shreds of cultural independence as remain to them. It's just too bad. But you can't put the clock back.

No. But you can put the clock forward.

When I travelled through the Soviet Union one of the things which struck me (I haven't heard anyone comment on it) was the absence of provincialisation. In Kiev, Tiflis and the other towns one found a vigorous intellectual activity. Publishing houses, newspapers, theatres, film-studios. They were all there. No need to leave your friends and rush off to the metropolis for an interesting job.

Capitalism, becoming more and more centralised and monopolised, has strangled intellectual life in the English Provinces—just as surely as it is strangling whole industrial areas by removing factories to the fringe of London.

Dick Sheppard Memorial Fund For Down And Outs Of England

REV. PAT MCCORMICK'S BROADCAST APPEAL

London, Yesterday.

To help the down and outs of all sections of the community is among the prime objects of a fund which is being launched as a memorial to the late famous churchman, the Rev. Dick Sheppard.

The present vicar, the Rev. Pat McCormick, his successor at St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, broadcast about the fund last night.

The Rev. McCormick, who recalled Dick Sheppard's deeds of just ten years ago, said: "The Dick Sheppard Trust has been formed with the object of expanding his constant aim of radiating religion in practical forms, as well as to establish a permanent and viable memorial to the benefit of all who go to St. Martin's."

ALL SORTS OF GRANTS

"The first object embraces the support of places, including Canterbury Cathedral, at which Canon Sheppard worked."

"The Trust funds will be managed by six trustees. There will also be a management committee."

The Rev. McCormick, who is chairman of the management committee, said it hopes that income from the Trust Fund will be given to all sorts of grants which will help people the same as Dick Sheppard did; for example, down and outs of all sections of the community.

DONATIONS INVITED

The Rev. McCormick invited donations towards the Fund from friends of the late Canon Sheppard living far and wide.

French Bid For 25-Year Pact With Reich

Paris, Yesterday.

A proposal for a 25-years Franco-German non-aggression pact will be made by the French Premier, M. Daladier when he meets the German Foreign Minister, von Ribbentrop according to reliable circles.

A proposal of a similar nature was made by the former Ambassador to Germany, M. Poncelet, before he left Berlin, but Germany evidenced reserve on this suggestion.

It is said that at the time M. Francois-Poncet first broached the subject, Germany pointed out that several fundamental problems such as the dissolution of the Franco-Soviet pact, the return of former German colonies, appeasement in Franco-Italian relations and a solution of the Spanish question must precede any such long-term treaty.

French Radical Socialist circles state, however, that at the forthcoming conference with the Reich Foreign Minister, M. Daladier and M. Bonnet will make an attempt to open discussions on this topic.

Radical Socialist circles deny the assertions of the left wing papers that M. Daladier is pushing a policy of understanding with Germany energetically at the present time in order to strengthen his own position, and declare that the Franco-German declaration and the projected nonaggression pact are merely the logical outcome of the Munich agreement and the only commensurate course following the collapse of France's former ally, Czechoslovakia.

Advocates of the pact are inclined to regard the internal political events as strengthening their position, since the new strike wave will constitute a further obstacle to the armament programme.—Trans-Ocean.

STUDENT DISORDERS IN BUDAPEST

Budapest, Yesterday.

High school students who had demonstrated on Thursday in front of Parliament for Dr. Imredy and against the attempts to establish a Popular Front in Hungary, demonstrated again yesterday.

Several hundred students marched to the building of the liberal paper, "Estikurir" which in its last edition had said that the student demonstrations on Thursday had been "ordered" by Dr. Imredy.

The students bombarded the building with stones and smashed the office windows. Other groups of demonstrators smashed the windows of numerous shops.

Police succeeded in restoring order in all parts of the city.—Trans-Ocean.

IN a speech recently delivered in France, the King of the Belgians stated that a lasting European peace depended upon the restoration of normal trade between the different States. A similar opinion has been expressed by a number of European statesmen. And not only by them, but by various national socialist leaders in Germany. There would therefore seem to be no difference of opinion in respect of this vital point. It is all the more surprising that no one so far indicated how the desired result should be achieved.

It is unfortunately not superfluous to recall that moral trade relations presuppose free trade. But this freedom of trade no longer exists in the majority of European States. Most of them are governed by dictators who, in their efforts to establish a compulsory balance, regulate exports and subjects imports to the quota system. The principle underlying all these methods is known as autarky. Even the smaller States, which could never have dreamed of making themselves even approximately independent of the products of their greater neighbours, have during the past decades, endeavoured to produce the greatest possible amount of industrial articles on their territory. A large part of these newly created industrial products constitute a Government monopoly, even where company law outwardly governs the concerns.

In those States, exportation now longer plays the part incumbent upon it for centuries. It was formerly means to enrichment or improvement of standard of living. At the present moment, it has become in the totalitarian States the indispensable means for the vital nourishment of the inhabitants or for the provisioning of industry with raw materials. Since, in the majority of these States, the greater part of the industrial production is adjusted not to the manufacture of consumption goods for the masses, but to the production of war material, there is no possibility for countries acting in accordance with normal economic principles to secure a definite increase of the exports in Europe. For the system in vogue in the totalitarian States cannot develop an increased capacity of consumption. It rejects any kind of supplementary imports, and more particularly the importation of luxury wares. This precludes any possibility to sell articles for a higher and more refined class of consumers, wherefore in earlier days it was feasible owing to increasing prosperity of the domestic market to assess overhead costs at a fairly low rate, to produce additional quantities and to sell them at a profit on the world market. The general tendency of the autarkical countries is to confine export possibilities to raw materials, but to render more difficult the export of manufactured and transformed substances. It is hardly necessary to discuss the consequences which these tendencies must have on the standard of living of the Labourers in the countries of Western Europe.

This is not to say that it is impossible to initiate some form of European co-operation on this basis. On the contrary, the commercial policy pursued by the German Reich since the coming into power of the national socialist regime, is a clear proof of the desire to establish far-reaching trade relations between the European States and the Reich. But their methods amount to economic conquest. From the travels and the speeches of the German economic Minister Funk, it is quite clear that the scheme for a Greater Germany also obtains in the economic field. The first point is to weld Central, Eastern and Southern Europe into a commercial block under German overlordship. The Western States will gradually be reduced to a state of dependence. It is merely a question of time as regards the constitution of a customs union between the allied States. But even if such measures are not yet contemplated, the Germanophile quota policy of the said European is quite enough to create difficulties for the Western countries.

By
Georg Bernhard

Recently, the German economic authorities have taken the line of buying unlimited quantities of commodities from the agrarian States regardless of their own requirements of certain important raw materials and foodstuffs. This surplus is cast on to the world market. Here and there sales monopolies have been secured for wares that Germany only produces in small quantities or not at all. In this way, Germany has become the sole buyer of certain articles from certain other countries. A principle has thus been introduced into the world market that exists in private industry, above all in department stores, where one concern centralises the buying.

It can hardly be presumed that these methods for the official regulation of foreign trade will be rescinded by the totalitarian States. The impossibility of a change is not inherent in the autarkical principles as such. It is surprising to note that, in Great Britain more particularly, there is a series of theoreticians and practicalists who are convinced that it is possible to dissuade Germany first, and then Italy, from persisting in their ideas of self-sufficiency. All that is necessary is to grant money and commercial credits in order to secure the restoration of a normal international trade system. They forget thereby that the autarkical idea is closely linked up with the ideas of the totalitarian States with regard to the essence of capital and money. Money and capital are merely instruments. Industrial production is no longer linked up with the formation of capital. The State orders as much as it considers necessary. And it utilises production independently of the consumption markets which it confines to the narrowest limits. In this way, the autarkical countries maintain a currency that can no longer be freely exchanged for that of the capitalistically adjusted countries. And this is why the totalitarian States are obliged to regulate their imports and their exports, and this regulation in its turn brings forth autarky. Those who are familiar with the inner processes of national economy and industry have constantly, invariably and quite correctly emphasised that the prerequisite for the restoration of normal commercial relations lies in the stabilisation and alignment of the currencies. But how establish this prerequisite when it may result in the dislocation of the economic structure of several States?

The idea that normal relations can be established between Eastern and Western Europe is therefore for the moment illusory. The price which Western Europe would be called upon to pay would imply the renunciation of the hitherto utilised methods. The Western States must therefore realise that for some time the political frontiers which separate totalitarianism from democracies are completed by important economic demarcations. This must lead the democratic States to the admission that it is necessary to form a joint customs union and thus to oppose a Central and Eastern European complex by a West European forbidden.

By H.N.
Brailsford

FIVE years ago we all reckoned Germany among the two or three nations that led civilisation. The pogroms organised by her rulers ranks her to-day with Tsarist Russia in its darkest age, or with the Turkey of Abdul Hamid. So swiftly can the Fascist poison destroy the best that mankind has created.

This ghastly spectacle will stir in us two reactions. The first concerns our own duty at home.

Our civilisation stands no higher than that of the former German Republic. It is not immortal; it is not invulnerable.

Unless we steel ourselves and organise ourselves to defend its values and traditions of liberty and humanity, the world may have to rank us also, some five years hence, with the barbarous Germany of to-day.

Her Liberals went down because they lacked the grace to unite and the faith that dare resist. If we wait until the peril is obviously upon us, it will be too late.

Before our eyes our rulers are fraternising with the Fascist Axis. WORLD HELP NEEDED

Our second reaction is pity for the race chosen to be the martyr of this triumphant sagacity.

The choice for it, not merely in Germany, but wherever German influence dominates, lies now between suicide, exile, or a life of unbearable humiliation, poverty, and danger.

If there is among the still civilised few who witness this tragedy any capacity for collective international action, the problem of rescue should be undertaken jointly.

One looks for leadership, and President Roosevelt seems to be the only possible figure, for the League of Nations, which did noble humanitarian work in the early post-war years, stands ruined when we need it most.

If Roosevelt would lead, he would find, certainly here and doubtless in France, a response that would justify his initiative. Somewhere, at a cost to which all free peoples should contribute, an asylum must be found for this persecuted race.

JEWS' HOPES DASHED
With this news before us, we have to face the dolours of our own Government in Palestine. At the best, that little country could never have received more than a small fraction of the Jews who long for a place of refuge. But in good years it did receive more than 30,000.

That refuge, in the sorest need of the Jews, is now all but closed. The Jewish State which the Peel Commission proposed to create, though it would have had a very limited area, would have allowed the Jews to build their own National Home by their own state-manship.

Their science and devotion might have enabled them to provide eventually, it may be, for about two millions of their kinsmen. That project is abandoned. Since it has itself no plan or solution, the Government throws the responsibility for the future on the Jews and Arabs themselves. In the midst of a savage civil war, it summons them to a round-table.

It dooms the effort in advance by excluding from the Arab side the men whom this people follows as its leaders. The Indian round-table conference was wrecked in the same way from the start by the exclusion of Mr. Gandhi, who lay in prison while it assembled.

There is, moreover, no apparent basis on which Jews and Arabs can meet. The Arabs are in revolt not merely against the now abandoned solution of partition, but against the Bal-continent. The former black is naturally the corollary of the Munich agreement. It is improbable that the economic and financial system of the Centre and East can be maintained in the long run. But since the events of the last month, it is difficult to say when and how any change can take place. If possible to put the idea of an economic union in Western Europe into practice, this will form the basis for later union in the whole of the continent. But if unsuccessful, to achieve political and economic union in time, the West will be gradually devoured by the national socialism of the East and involved to the European chaos that must follow on the incoherent system applied in the Centre and the East.

Palestine?

four Declaration itself. In all their pronouncements they have declared the Jewish immigration into Palestine must totally cease.

There is no basis here for discussion, and it seems unlikely that this conference will ever meet. If a few Arab moderates should brave the Terrorists by attending it, what chance is there that the rebels, with the money and arms of the Fascist Powers behind them, will accept its findings?

This attempt to shift its own responsibility to other shoulders means only that an irresolute Government is looking for excuses for delay.

DUTY NEGLECTED

A new approach will have to be found if ever we are to solve this desperate problem.

The root of all our mistakes lay in the failure to realise at the start that our duty as the Mandatory Power was to develop this backward and impoverished country as a whole.

Into a prosperous and civilised Palestine the Jewish National Home could have been fitted. What is impossible is that a thriving Jewish home should grow in peace with an Arab slum at its doors.

This was a work for the British Administration, and not for the Arabs themselves. Their leaders come from the feudal class, which draws its wealth from rack-rents and usury.

Two things were necessary. The first was to free the Arab cultivators from the oppressions of their masters, by enabling them to become free peasant owners to tenants of the State.

The second was to do for the Arabs what the Jews have done for themselves—to introduce irrigation promptly and on a great scale. Only if that were done by the State would the eventual benefit go to the people.

Because we never had such a plan for the development of Palestine, the attitude, even of the Arab masses, was bound to be hostile. They saw no happier future before them, no prospect either of emancipation or of material prosperity.

Nothing, it may be, can be done on these lines to-day. But here is a suggestion for future policy which might be explored.

ENGLAND has at last arisen out of her slumber. Once more she is vigilant, keyed to reply forcefully to any threat. Once again she has taken the lead in the battle of nations.

She has no need of allies that may break faith. England, alone, is mightier than all the rest, and shall be while Englishmen are Englishmen.

Once again has the invader been humbled. Once more can we feel proud of our native land as destined rulers of the world. No Fascist might shall daunt. We have no need to go cap in hand to Communist Russia for her aid.

FATHER RYAN SAYS:

Hats off to Mother Cabrini

A Beatified Nun Who Wanted To Come To China

TWO weeks ago an Italian nun who worked in the United States was declared "Blessed" in Rome. No mention of it would have appeared in the press only for the fact that an altar went on fire and provided a paragraph for the papers. Yet those who know what nuns do respect them, and people of every denomination, and of none, in Hong Kong have testified to the worth of their work in the Colony.

Many of the nuns who have given their lives to work in Hong Kong are Italians, and this Mother Cabrini, now called Blessed Frances Cabrini, might have come here but for what we call an accident. For it was her intention to come to China. So I shall tell you something about her.

She died only twenty-one years ago, there is a square in New York called after her, she crossed the Atlantic twenty-four times, she founded sixty-seven houses—convents, schools, orphanages and hospitals—Mother Cabrini was not an ordinary woman.

In the first place it is extremely rare for a person, however remarkable his or her life might have been, to be declared "Blessed" within such a short time. In fact the ordinary rule of the Catholic Church is that one cannot even begin thinking about it until the person is dead fifty years. The Pope alone can make an exception. He did it in this case. He knew Mother Cabrini himself, but it was not that which induced him to take the step. It was rather the thousands of letters that came from every part of the American Continent where her memory was preserved, saying "This was a saint. Let us call her one."

Among the Immigrants

Who then was this Mother Cabrini? She called herself, "a poor little nun whom nobody minds" yet she is the first citizen of the United States to receive from the Catholic Church the official title of "Blessed." She was a Milanese and she grew up with big ideas. She had natural organising ability and when she decided to become a nun she decided to found a new congregation that would work in China. The Pope of those days, Leo XIII, said No. His words in effect were: "Your congregation is well planned. But take it to the United States and do something for the Italians there. They need your help more than China." They did it. It was fifty years ago. The rush to America had begun, and in New York City alone there were 40,000 Italians. They were mostly village people, facing something altogether unfamiliar, and they were submerged in the strange city. In every ship, for the next twenty-five years, they poured into the country. They established colonies in every big city, from New York to Seattle. They worked in the country, on the farms and the cotton fields, in the mines and on the railways. They went too rapidly to be absorbed into their surroundings. They spoke no English, and they had no schools, no hospitals, no one to take a personal interest in them.

Then Mother Cabrini appeared on the scene on the last day of March in 1889. There were six other sisters with her. Her work began at once and it spread like magic. Within an incredibly short space of time the Italian children were in special schools, the orphans and the lost were being cared for, the sick were being tended, missing members of families were being traced, and the Italian groups that had been getting a name for lawlessness were developing into the most loyal citizens of their new country.

A Record Of Achievement

During the whole of the thirty years of life that remained to her she went from one end of the continent to another and wherever she went schools and hospitals and churches sprang up. In one year we find her opening the Columbus Hospital in New York and a large school for girls in Buenos Aires. She visited Peru in the same year; in the middle of winter crossed the Andes on a mule. In another year, she opened two schools in New York, a home for orphans in New Orleans, a school in Chicago, another in Scranton, Pennsylvania and then went back to New York to start another.

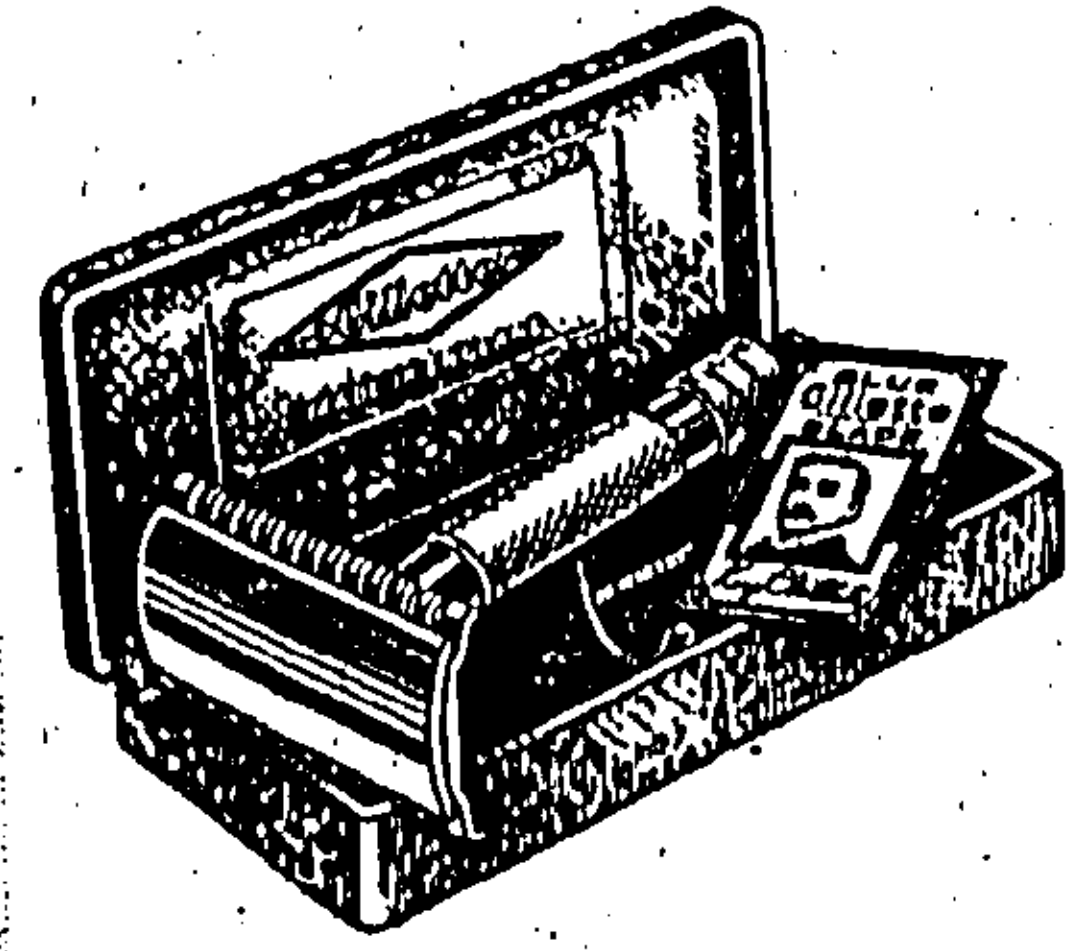

Where the money came from no one asked. It came; people trusted her. Where her workers came from was more difficult to explain, for she demanded a high level of training from her sisters, she would send into the hospitals and schools none who were not fit to do work that was the equal of any that was being done. Before she died two thousand Sisters, each of whom she personally admitted, and over the training of whom she had watched with care, were carrying on the good work that she began. Now there are more than 4,000, and they have 92 houses and convents in which to work.

And all the time the woman who was doing these things was supposed to be an invalid. With all the risks that she was taking, in travelling by every conceivable means to every conceivable place, people thought that she ought to insure her life, but from the insurance standpoint she was too risky a subject for insurance, for she should have been dead years ago. In spite of her achievements, and in spite of her constant illness, the one thing that everyone who knew in the fact that she was never hurried, never impatient, never upset. She charmed everyone whom she met, never tried to use them, but won help before she asked for it. When she died she was buried in a cemetery outside the city, but later, when her fame began to grow it was decided to transfer her remains to the chapel of her convent in New York City. It was then sixteen years after her death, but big Irish policemen fought for the privilege of marching in the Guard of Honour when the coffin was borne to its last resting-place. They remembered the "little Italian nun" whom they met on their beat in "Little Italy" long ago. When she first went to the Italian quarter the place had a bad name, for among the immigrants were members of the Camorra and the Mafia, and under the cover of ancient feuds some of the worst criminals of Naples made life dangerous. People avoided the quarter, and even the police did not go there singly, but Mother Cabrini and her Sisters walked through it unhurt and honoured by all.

When it was proposed in New York that some place in the city should be named after her the Board of Aldermen passed it unanimously. They did this last February, and Mayor La Guardia signed the resolution at once. A special ceremony of dedication marked the occasion, when Cabrini Circle was the name bestowed on the plaza at the entrance to Fort Tryon Park, in the Washington Heights section of Manhattan. Thousands marched in the parade, American Legionnaires beside Boy Scouts; Jewish War Veterans beside Knights of Columbus, and representatives of every leading denominational and non-sectarian organisation. And all this because of a "little Italian nun" who died twenty years ago.

Genius And Sanctity

What is the significance in our day of such a woman? A great woman she must have been, for what she did was within the capacity of very few. Look over the world, pick out the names of the famous that have lived within the past half-century and ask who has done so much to win the undying gratitude of any people. Very few, if any, will be found. Yet it is not on what she did in organising new institutions that her life to greatness rests, but on her union of efficiency amounting to genius joined with goodness so remarkable that it won recognition from the Church. The Catholic Church does not reward efficiency, or organising ability, or success. Not Constantine, not Innocent III, not Columbus, have won a halo of approved sanctity, but this glory was gained by the quiet nun who never made the slightest effort to win recognition or gain fame. It was because she served God in a heroic way that she was declared Blessed. And it was because she served God so loyally that she was inspired to do all that she did. Other motives, we are assured, are capable of leading women to do such things as she did and to spend their lives in doing them. But no far they have never done so.

AMERICA CHOOSES

Mr. Neville Chamberlain has done more than reshape British foreign policy in recent weeks. He also has revolutionised the average American's way of thinking about England and has given new coherence, strength and direction to the isolationist movement in my country.

That movement had always been strong in America—stronger, perhaps, than it is in England—but it had been breaking down in the months prior to Munich. The Roosevelt Administration had been using all its instruments of propaganda to overcome public opposition to collective security, or military alliances with foreign Powers. And it had succeeded, at least, in thoroughly selling Americans the idea that, if a major war came in Europe, they could not stay out.

Reaching down into the masses of people who ordinarily consider that what goes on in Europe is no affair of theirs, it began to stir in them a fear that the cancer of Fascism and Nazism would soon spread to America—unless they were prepared to fight it on its home grounds. Unless, that is, they were ready to see their own country join forces with other democracies to squash the Fascist menace before it achieved irresistible size and strength.

Looking around for allies, they naturally turned to Britain, which they had been taught to regard as the greatest democracy in the world. Greater even than their own in some respects, and, especially, in its basic resistance to the Fascist spirit.

England, they had been taught, was a country where a Catholic or a Jew could hold the highest office in the land; where lynchings did not occur and negroes were not treated like members of some sub-human species; where troops were not called out to gas or shoot down strikers and cops didn't bash in the heads of pickets; where men could join Unions without fear of losing their jobs and Labour sometimes ruled the country. Surely, they said to themselves, Britain must hate Hitler and Mussolini even more than we do.

Just as that idea was beginning to sink in America's public consciousness so deeply that there was at last a chance of the United States being drawn into an open, active alliance with Britain and France, Mr. Chamberlain came along with his Munich agreement and put the kibosh on it all.

Watching the Czechoslovakian crisis and its aftermath, Americans suddenly were seized with a conviction that they had been wrong about Britain after all, and that, far from being a democracy greater than their own, it was hell bent along the road to Fascism.

It's not for the likes of me to say whether that conviction is a sound one. I merely report its existence—basing my report on private correspondence and what is being said in the Press and on the radio in America—and add that it has knocked the props out from under the collective security movement in my country.

There seems now to be a general feeling that it's no use talking any more about a "united front of the democracies against Fascism" because there aren't, or soon won't be, any more democracies other than our own.

The growth of the feeling that Britain and America can't be pals any more is not confined to the rank-and-file in the United States. It also is apparent in official circles at Washington, whose concern over the strategic and economic effects of the Munich settlement is almost painful.

The impetus which the settlement has given to autarchy—to totalitarian economics—is a crushing blow to the hopes of Mr. Cordell Hull. As for the strategic effects—America for many years has concentrated her defences on the Pacific, being sure that in any war she would always find herself allied with Britain, the only Power even faintly capable of attacking the United States from the Atlantic.

The post-Munich announcement that America will expand her navy and army so that, single-handedly, she may defend both her coastlines

PAUL W. WARD

Of the noted Baltimore Sun, tells the meaning of to-day's political trend in America.

MONSTER BANNER of Labour-supported candidates at a New York election meeting.

Most of all, Americans have been impressed and alarmed by the kind words which important British editors and politicians seem to feel compelled to utter about the Hitler and Mussolini regimes, and their insistence that the British and the totalitarian systems can live in peace and harmony, side by side. The average American, who takes a simple view of things generally, but regards politicians with Gallic cynicism and distrust, and insists that those who utter such kind words have something up their sleeves.

Neither the impending visit of the King and Queen to Washington, nor the result of the Congressional elections, it likely material to alter this new American attitude towards Britain.

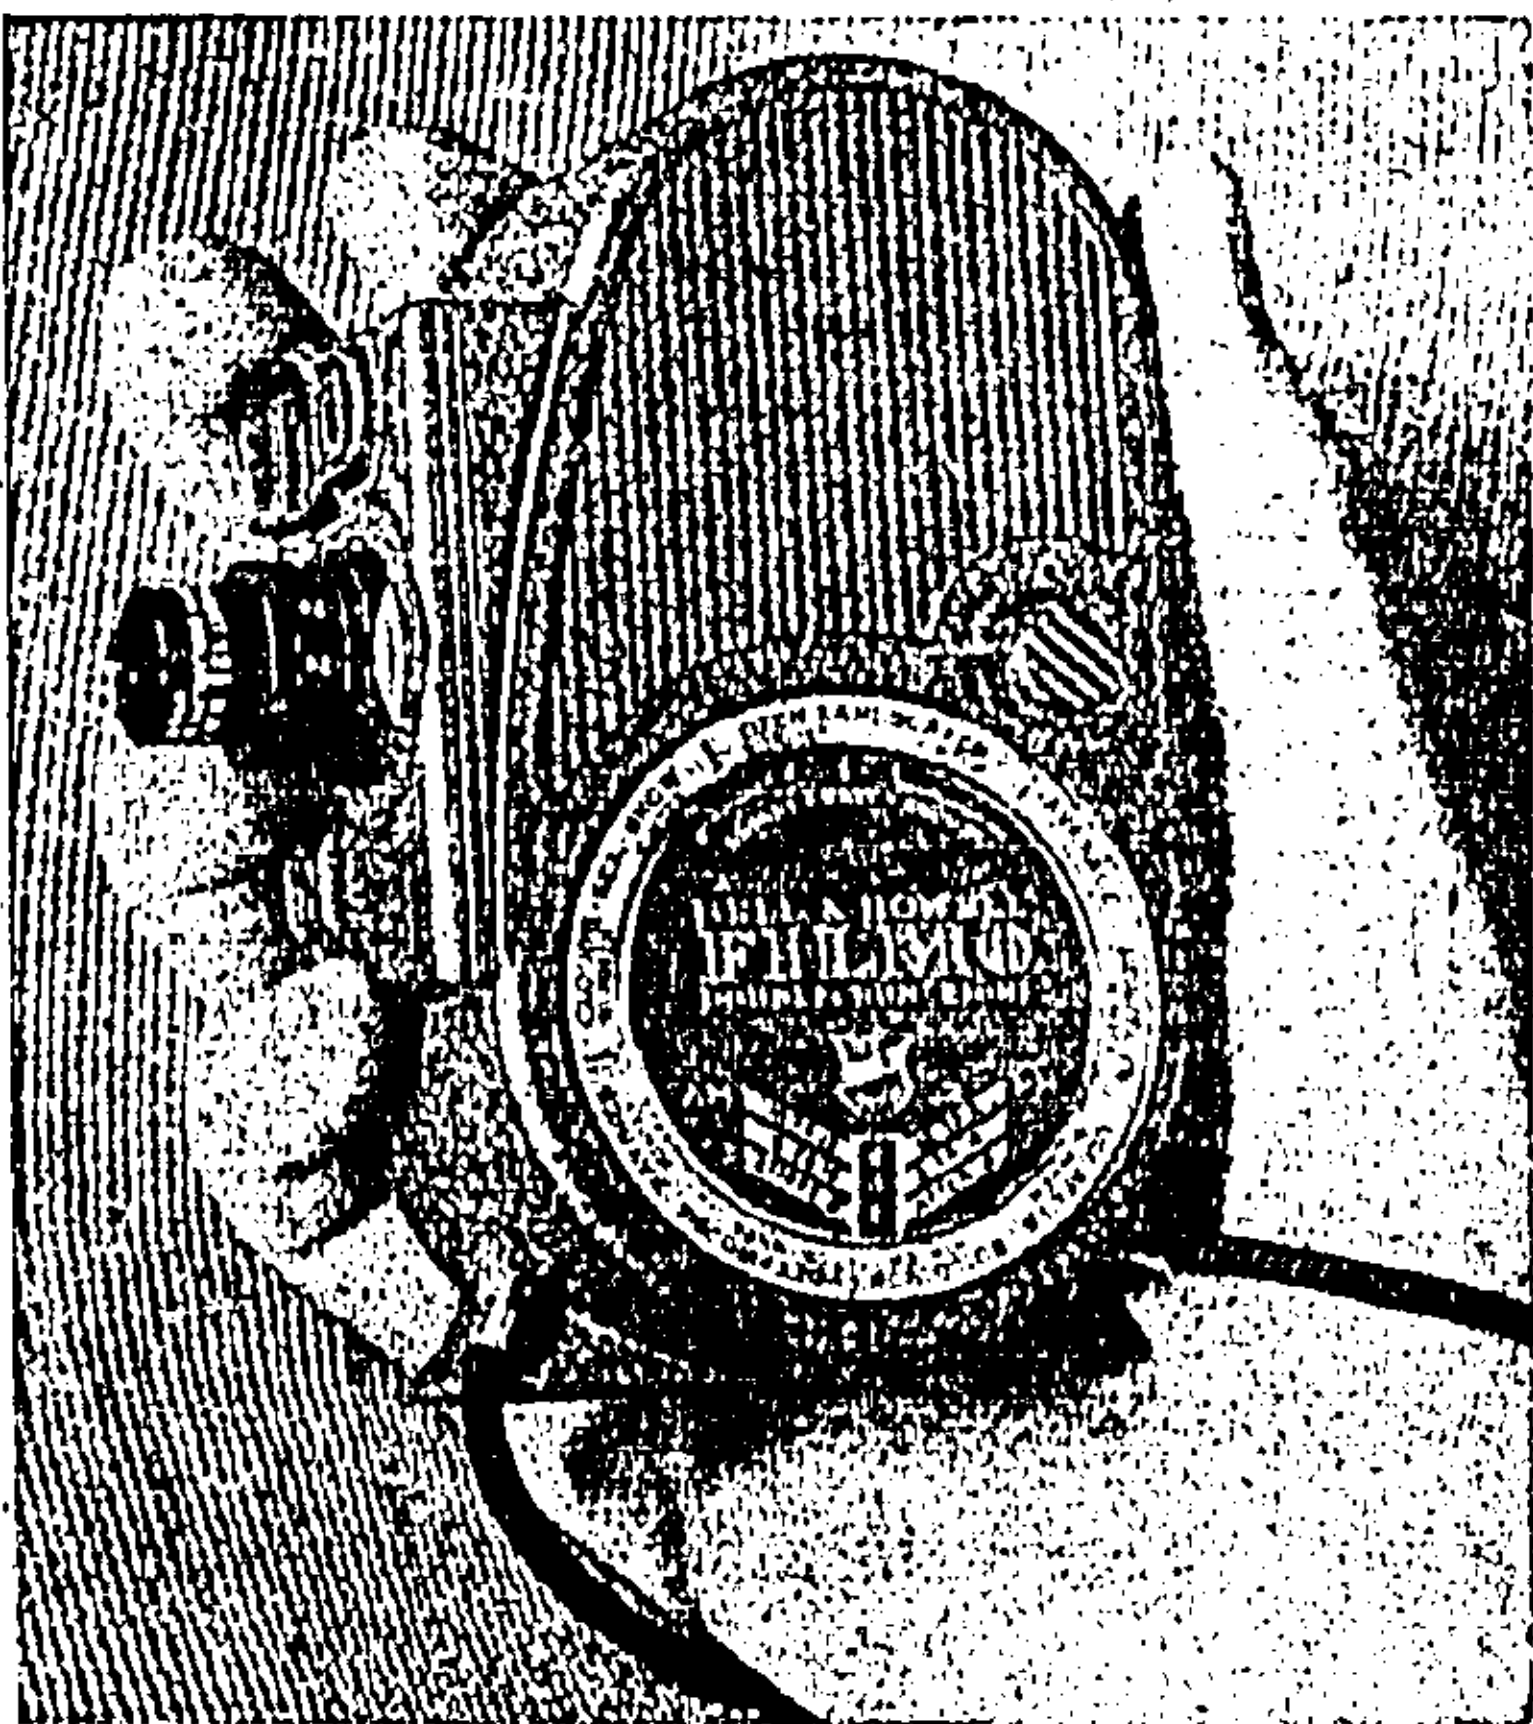

The election returns, in so far as they denote a switch towards Conservatism, can only increase America's new drift away from collective action in the international field. As for the royal visit—my countrymen will be wanting only to see what a real king and queen look like, and, especially, to see how the Duke of Windsor's successor behaves in public. What would be more helpful in reviving American confidence in Britain as a democracy would be a firming up of H. M. Opposition. That is indicated by American Press comment on the apparent lack of any strong resistance here to what my countrymen regard as Fascist trends. But, perhaps, even that won't work.

John Chamberlain, writing recently in the "New Republic," offered a different prescription. He said that if the B.B.C. would broadcast the complete readings of G. T. Garra's "Mussolini's Roman Empire" (Penguin) and Mr. Chamberlain would agree to go to the country in a General Election immediately after the fifth reading, he himself would undertake to lead America into an alliance with the resulting British Government.

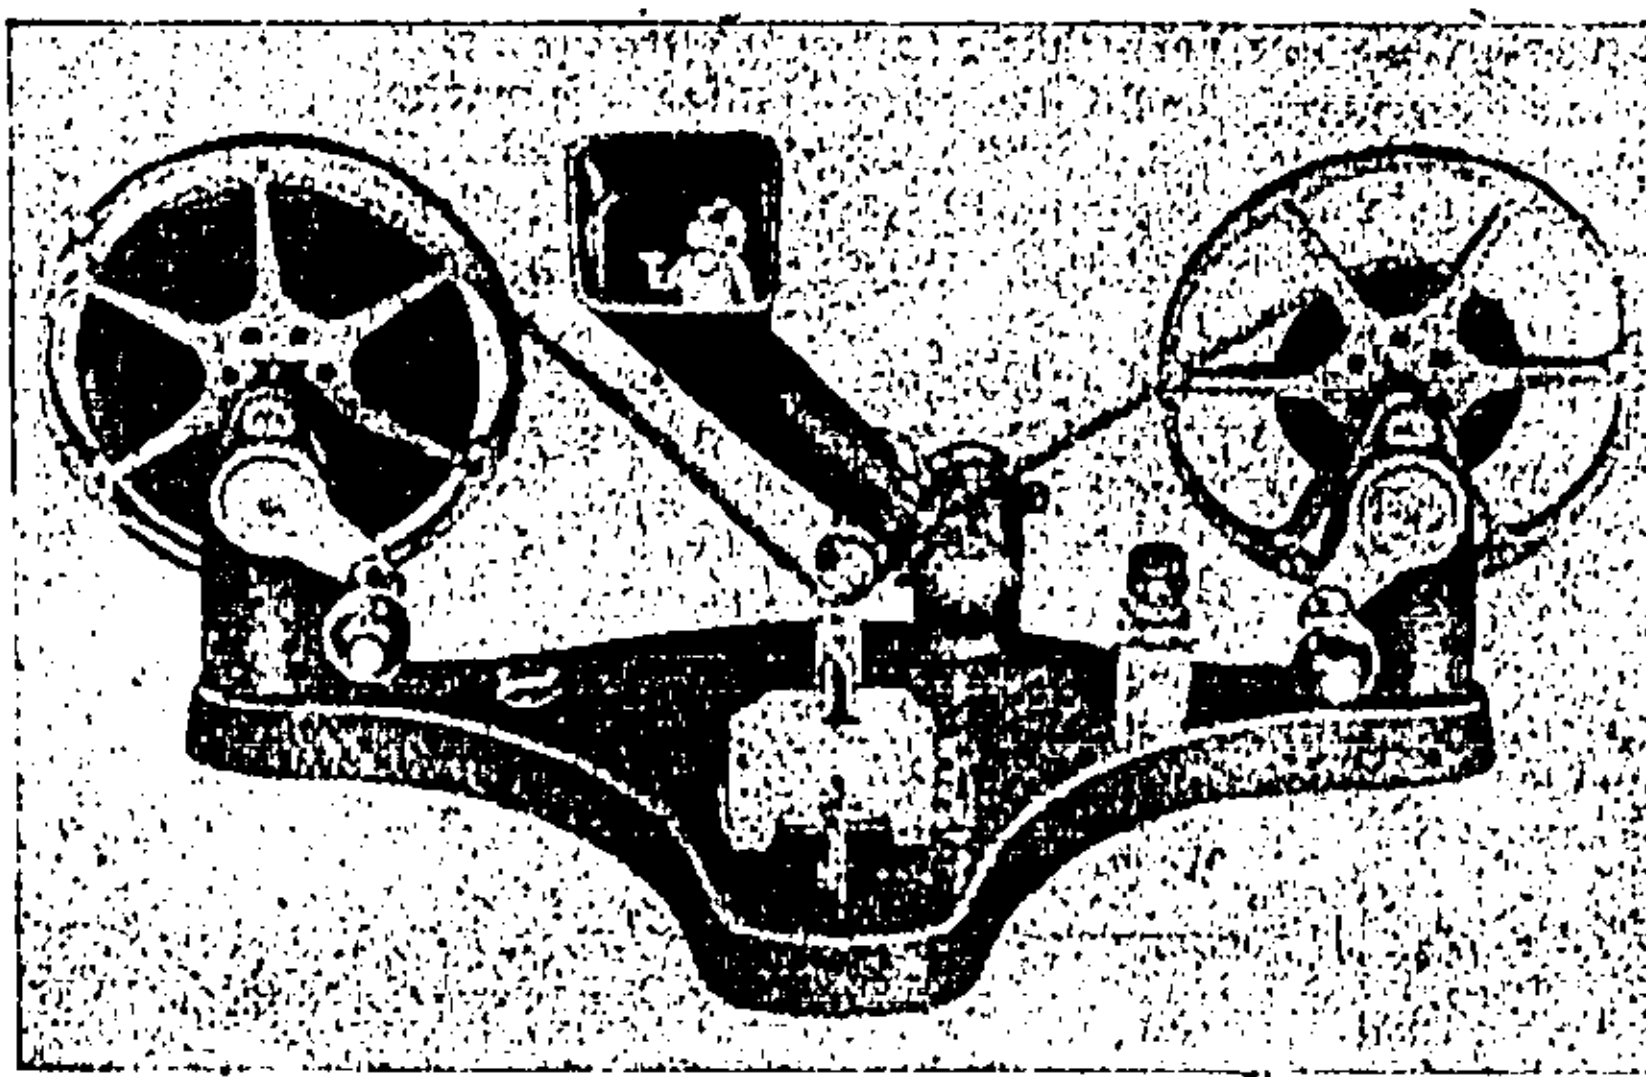

The American writer implied, of course, his confidence that it would be a Government vastly different from the present one.

SEVEN POINT PROGRAMME FOR BETTER H.K. HEALTH

Recommendations To Government Of D.M.S.

GOEBBELS BURLLES

Berlin, Yesterday.
The Reich Propaganda Minister, Doctor Goebbels, in a speech at the annual meeting of the Reich "Chamber of Culture" in Berlin, dealt with the Jewish problem and with the practical monopoly enjoyed by Jews in the cultural life of Germany before the advent to power of the Nazis.

Referring to those who to-day would fain pity the unfortunate Jews, the Minister said that such persons had not the remotest idea how great was Jewish influence formerly in all domains of cultural activity in Germany.

The German press was almost entirely in the hands of Jews, German films were written and produced by Jews, a German theatre not run by Jews was something inconceivable, Jews were the most prominent representatives of German literature, Jews predominated in the world of music and musical criticism.

The great heritage of a "nation of poets and thinkers" ran imminent risk of passing entirely into the hands of an alien race and the Jews themselves cynically boasted of the fact.

The Minister said that Germany had become entirely immune to the destructive methods of the Jewish so-called intellectuals who in former times had succeeded in effectively discrediting all authority by subtle, malignant and

Preventive Medicine Chair For University

A seven-point programme for the betterment of the Colony's health is contained in the annual report of the Director of Medical Services. The recommendations are:—

(1) Reorganisation of Health Division on accepted lines with placing of sanitary inspectorate and subordinate staff under the direct supervision and control of the Medical Officers of Health—the scavenging of the Urban Council Area being carried out by a Cleansing Branch of the Sanitary Department.

(2) Increase in staff of Chinese and European Health Staff and appointment of a Deputy Director of Health Services to co-ordinate Health activities and to be available, if desired, as Professor of Public Health and Preventive Medicine in the University of Hong Kong.

(3) Substitution of sewerage system of nightsoil disposal for

(4) Overhaul of existing schemes of refuse disposal involving dumping, especially during times of typhoons.

(5) Legislation to cover town planning, zoning and the prohibition of conversion of dwelling houses into factories.

(6) Slum clearance preceded by construction of healthy houses for the displaced on a sub-economic basis.

(7) Covering of Albany Road Reservoir and filtration and sterilisation (by chloramine or other approved method) of pipe-

FAMILY BRAWL IN LEPER ASYLUM

A family brawl occurred in the Kennedy Town Lepers' Asylum on Friday when two inmates of the institution, husband and wife, came to blows.

They were separated by those in charge, but not before Lam Bu, the husband had inflicted serious injuries on his wife, Chan Ying. The woman was sent to the Queen Mary Hospital where her condition was yesterday reported to be serious.

The husband was charged before Mr. R. A. D. Forrest at the Central Magistracy yesterday morning with causing grievous bodily harm to his wife. He was remanded until Tuesday morning.

THREE BITTEN BY DOGS

Three persons were bitten by dogs during the week-end.

A European boy, David Filburn, of No. 8, Bay View Mansions, was bitten by a dog belonging to Mrs. Dickens and had to be treated by a doctor. The dog was sent to the Kennedy Town Slaughter House for observation.

Mrs. S. Oles, of No. 5B, Chancery Lane, was bitten by a dog owned by Miss Bascombe and was treated at the Queen Mary Hospital. The animal was sent to Matakok for observation.

The third victim was Wong Kai-hung, who was admitted to the Queen Mary Hospital after being bitten by a dog belonging to Mr. L. F. Lane.

SHOULDERING
A Father's Responsibility

LIFE insurance is more than a safe way to save money, more than a sure means of protecting dependents, more than collateral or a reserve fund on which to borrow for business opportunities or personal emergencies. It is a plan that builds character at the same time it builds an estate.

It means that a man with adequate life insurance has recognized his personal responsibilities, and as he perseveres in this wise way to meet them, he trains himself in the habits of thrift, regularity and foresight in personal affairs that make for success in his business affairs as well.

EXPERIMENTAL NAVY FIFTEEN BEATEN BY CLUB

STEVEN INJURED

A clearly heeled ball, a dive through two packs just breaking up and a grand try between the posts by J. R. Henderson, youthful Club scrum-half, resulted in the Navy recording their first win over the Navy this season, in a friendly Rugby game at the Valley yesterday, winning by five tries and a penalty dropped-goal (18 points) to three tries and two penalty goals (15 points) after the Navy had led at the interval by 9 points to 6.

The fixture was originally between Club, weakened by Combined Manoeuvres, and H.M.S. Medway, but the Navy made a last-minute request to field an experimental Navy fifteen.

Club made several changes before the teams took the field. Grievie being included at left centre-three-quarter, while MacGrath dropped back into his original full-back berth. Cessford, at fly-half, was very fast and displayed a clean pair of hands, and Henderson gave one of his best appearances behind the Club pack, scoring two grand tries, the first as a result of splendid backing up.

The turning point in the game arrived when Pay-Lt. Steven, Navy's brilliant full-back and captain, was badly kicked in a loose scrum and had to leave the field for some time. Although he returned later he was not on for more than five minutes before he was compelled to leave the field for good. Lt. Humphrey was taken out of the scrum to fill the vacancy at full-back, and Club took full advantage of the weakness.

POWELL IMPRESSES

A newcomer in D. I. Bosanquet, at left-wing three-quarter, was not very impressive and was very slow off the mark, although in all fairness to him the ball very rarely came to him clearly. Powell, who played for the Co. against Shanghai and the New Zealanders, showed glimpses of his previous form and, but for poor backing up, several of his efforts might have led to scores.

He was very fast, with a deceptive swerve, and combined very effectively with Grievie.

Navy badly missed the services of fast centre three-quarter. Skelton was never thorough enough, Ram, in the other position, handled the ball well but missed long before he was tackled. Ellis and Talbot made a fine set of Navy halves and with Withersden hooked brilliantly during the initial half the Navy backs could not complain of not receiving the ball.

For the Club, MacGrath, at full-back, tackled well but lacked support in front of him. Cessford and Henderson, the Club halves, worked well together, although the former was by no means at his best in attack, getting rid of the ball much too early. Henderson gave one of his best displays to date, and his place at the base of the Club pack for the triangular series seems deserved.

DESERVED SUCCESS

On the run of the play Club were good value for their win, although it must be borne in mind that Navy were seriously handicapped by the loss of Steven at full-back, this making a big difference in the closing stages.

Talbot opened the scoring for the Navy when he dashed over from a loose scrum for an unconverted try, but soon after Grievie forced his way over to level the scores. Caroy failed with the kick. Club were penalised and Withersden kicked a penalty goal to give the Navy the lead.

A loose ball in the Club's half was gathered by Cessford, who sent Henderson over wide of the posts, but just before the interval Navy again took the lead when a fine back movement saw Kelly go over near the corner flag.

Immediately after the interval Blawell levelled the scores with an unconverted try wide of the posts, but Navy looked as if they would clinch matters when Walters crossed the Club line for an unconverted try and then Henderson was penalised for offside and Withersden converted a penalty goal to give Navy a lead of 15 points to 6.

It was at this stage that Steven was injured and Humphrey dropped into the full-back position. Navy were penalised for a scrum infringement and Blawell dropped a penalty goal to reduce the arrears, and soon after a 5-yard scrum in the Navy's half saw the ball come out to Henderson, who scooped it into Blawell's hands for the latter to level the scores after a short dash.

Time was rapidly drawing to a close when Club forced Navy on the defensive and from a 5-yard scrum Henderson picked up a well heeled ball and dived through the packs as they were backing up for a grand winning try which Grievie surprisingly failed to convert.

Club:—W. M. MacGrath; D. I. Bosanquet; H. D. Bidwell (Captain); W. E. Grievie; C. J. Powell; F. Cessford; J. R. Henderson; T. H. Pratt; G. J. P. Cessford; B. O. M. Doane; A. J. G. Taylor and W. B. Richardson.

Navy:—Pay-Lt. Steven (Captain); Lt. Walters (Olympus); Lt. Skelton (Grampus); Lt. Ram (Duchess) and Lt. G. E. Kelly (Medway); Surg. Lt. Ellis (Medway) and Lt. Talbot (Otus); Lt. Anderson (Olympus); Mr. (Gn.) Withersden (Duncan) and Lt. Bod.

MIDDLESEX BEAT POLICE BY ODD GOAL IN SCRAPPY ENCOUNTER

CAER CLARK CUP CHAMPIONS GIVEN ANXIOUS MOMENTS POSITIONAL CHANGES DO THE TRICK

"Y" LADIES, champions, defeated Hong Kong Ladies in their Caer Clark Cup encounter at King's Park yesterday by a goal scored by Mrs. Burnett shortly after the interval.

After being held in the opening half, and with little prospect of ever scoring, "Y", who were again without Miss M. Smith, made several positional changes in the second half and within a few minutes they scored, while for the greater part of the remainder of the game they kept Hong Kong Ladies on the defensive, only the gallant efforts of Mrs. Lunson in the opposing goal preventing them from registering again.

In the second half Mrs. Burnett took over the "Y" centre forward position and Miss Bradbury went to the right wing, while Miss Harper and Miss H. Becker took up the inside-left and inside-right positions respectively.

Miss Harper and Miss Westcott worked well together, but met with stern opposition from Mrs. Dalziel and Miss G. Swan. Mrs. Burnett, at centre-forward, required watching, being accurate in her passing, while Miss Becker sent out some good passes to Miss Bradbury, who gave a better display on the wing.

Special mention must be made of Mrs. Williams, at left-half. Quick in her tackling and safe in her clearances, she was never far behind her forwards and kept both Miss Westcott and Miss Harper supplied with good passes.

Hong Kong Ladies were handicapped by an injury to Miss Grier, their centre-forward, who was limping throughout the game.

Together with Mrs. Lunson, in goal, Miss Hutchinson, Hong Kong Ladies' left-back, was all that could be desired. She was hard in her hitting, safe in her tackling and timed out of number was the main stimulating block to the opposing forwards.

Mrs. Dalziel, at left-half, was also prominent. Opposed as she was to the Westcott-Becker pair in the first half, and to the Westcott-Harper combination in the later period, her task was not an enviable one, but she finished with honours even. Miss Purvis also played well.

"Y" Ladies: Mrs. Read; Mrs. Burke and Miss A. Fowler; Mrs. Stone, Miss McCaw and Mrs. Williams; Mrs. Burnett, Miss Harper, Miss Bradbury, Miss H. Becker and Miss Westcott.

BROWN CUP

Seaforth Ladies Win

Seaforth Ladies negotiated a stiff hurdle in their quest for the Brown Cup when they defeated Central British Association Ladies by the odd goal in three at King's Park yesterday.

Seaforth Ladies deserved their win, if only for the manner in which Mrs. Ackroyd accepted the two chances that came her way.

Mrs. Ackroyd, very fast and hard in her hitting, upon fed Miss J. Maton on the right wing, and occasional distribution to the other wing might have brought better results.

Mrs. McLeod worked hard and was a great spoiler, while Mrs. Jelu, though a good defensive player, was woefully weak in her clearances.

For C.B.A., Miss C. Bone was one of the hardest workers on the field, helping her forwards at all times and clearing well.

Miss P. MacFadyen started shakily and would probably have saved the first goal had she come out earlier, but in the second half her kicking and positioning was good.

C.B.A. took the lead when Mrs. McKay diverted the ball into her own goal, but shortly before the interval Mrs. Ackroyd equalised. The second period was evenly contested and just on time Mrs. Jelu sent the ball to Mrs. Hutton, who passed for Mrs. Ackroyd to score.

Seaforth Ladies: Mrs. Strachan, Mrs. McKay and Mrs. Wilmot; Mrs. Jelu, Mrs. McLeod and Mrs. Wilmot; Mrs. Jelu, Mrs. McLeod and Mrs. Wilmot.

NEW CLUBHOUSE FOR KOWLOON DOCK

Tenders have been called for the building of the Hong Kong and Whampoa Dock Company's new Recreation Club, on a site just behind the present lawn bowls Clubhouse.

The new building will present an imposing sight and will be the largest in the Colony. A lounge measuring 81 ft. by 85 ft. will cater to followers of badminton, while adequate accommodation has been provided for a billiards room with two tables on a second storey. Plans for the new Clubhouse are on view at the moment in the present clubhouse.

The architects are Messrs. Leigh and Orange.

Miss J. Maton, Miss Ackroyd, Mrs. Hutton, Mrs. Thompson and Mrs. Hamilton.

C.B.A.: Miss P. MacFadyen; Miss V. Beaumont and Miss L. Dunn; Miss J. Duckworth, Miss C. Bone and Miss J. Black; Miss J. Louin, Miss J. Crawford, Miss E. Woolley, Mrs. W. Daniels and Miss E. Hunt.

RECREIO "PRACTICE" The Brown Cup encounter between the two Recreation Ladies' teams at King's Park yesterday was more in the nature of a practice game and resulted in the "A" team winning by six goals after leading at the interval by two goals.

"B" team could make no impression on the "A" defence, finding Miss Botelho and Miss Ribeiro, the backs, too good.

Miss C. Silva (3), Miss A. Alves (2) and Miss M. Rosa scored the goals.

POINTS CONCEDED As Diocesan Girls' School were unable to raise a team for their fixture against Hong Kong Ladies, in the Brown Cup League yesterday they conceded a walk-over and both points.

FRIENDLY GAME Owing to the non-appearance of the appointed umpires, owing to Combined Manoeuvres, the Brown Cup game between Central British School and "Y" Ladies was not played, but in the friendly game played the schoolgirls won by 6 goals to 1, after leading at the interval by four clear goals.

C.B.S. were well served by their forward line, in which Miss J. Bradbury and Miss Nash shone, while in defence Miss A. Smith was sound.

"Y" Ladies, who were a player short, were completely outplayed, though, they managed to score a goal. Miss I. Buchanan shortly after the interval.

Miss J. Bradbury (3), Miss Nash (2) and Miss A. Smith scored for the schoolgirls.

C.B.S.: Miss C. Minnot, Miss D. Handyside, Miss P. Walton, Miss M. Handyside, Miss A. Smith, Miss J. Kew, Miss K. Hyde Lay, Miss A. Nash, Miss V. Sissons, Miss J. Bradbury and Miss P. Bernah.

Winners' Attack Weak In Goalmouth

POLICE MAKE FINE RALLY AFTER BEING LED BY 3 GOALS

THERE was very little over which to enthuse in the First Division football encounter at Sookunpoo yesterday between Middlesex and Police, the soldiers just managing to win a most scrappy game by the odd goal in five. Although the "Die-hards" led by three clear goals at the interval little was seen of their vanguard during the second period, and on the run of play throughout a draw would have been a more fitting result.

The Middlesex opened on the offensive and two good movements ended with Pearson and Saw shooting over. Five minutes after the kick-off the soldiers took the lead when a hard shot from the vanguard, deflected for a corner by the Police custodian, and from a perfect centre by Marable COURTNEY scored with a first-timer. Middlesex continued to have the better of the exchanges, but clever midfield play came to naught, leading to glaring poor finishing by the attack, who were much to prone to attempt to walk the ball into the net.

After 30 minutes, however, the soldiers added two goals in quick succession, the first of these being obtained by Grogan, who cleverly took a pass down the centre from Courtney. About three minutes after the attack, who were much to prone to attempt to walk the ball into the net.

On the resumption Pearson resumed his own position at centre-forward, which he vacated in favour of Grogan after 20 minutes in the first half. This change, however, appeared to have little effect on the play, and as the game progressed so did the Police vanguard come more into the limelight. Following 15 minutes play in this period the Police reduced the arrears with a well-deserved goal. From a free-kick awarded for an offence against one of the soldiers' defenders, Bone sent in a high-dropping shot which Jackson nudged out to the feet of COURTNEY, who little difficulty in scoring. The Police persisted on the defensive for long periods. With only 10 minutes left for play HOWLETT obtained the second goal and from then till the end of the game they strove hard, but unavailingly, for the equaliser.

Although the Police were unduly troubled, dealt confidently with every S. CHINA "A" 2 S. CHINA "B" 0 At Caroline Hill, after a dull and listless game, the Police emerged winners by two clear goals in their encounter with South China "B", last season's champions. Although the margin somewhat flatters the "A" they always looked the superior team.

Soon after the commencement of the game it became very obvious that neither set of players intended to exert themselves, and with one or two exceptions, none of them produced the football of which they are capable. For spectators who expected a tangle worthy of the teams participating, the game was a sad disappointment—of the quite rare crowd that was present at the kick-off only a handful remained at half-time.

Ten minutes from half-time "A" took the lead through LAI SHUI-WING, who ran round a defender and intercepted a pass-back to Ho Po-pin and tapped the ball into the net. Fifteen minutes after the resumption LOO PAI-WING broke through the "B" defence and with a soft shot, which Ho Po-pin made only a half-hearted attempt to stop, scored the second and last goal of the match.

Both teams were below strength and also made one or two positional changes, most noticeable of which were Pau Ka-ning as centre-forward, and Cheung Moon-wing in goal for the "A", while Chan Tak-fai played practically throughout at outside-left for the "B".

QUEEN'S COLLEGE BEATEN On the Radio ground, Ellis Kadoorie Indian School beat Queen's College in a hard-fought hockey match by a solitary goal scored by Gurbachan Singh during the second half. M. Afzal, Balwant Singh and Yusuf did well for the winners, while the losers were best served by Hoo-ham Singh and K. Mohd.

The Second Round Colony Mixed Doubles lawn tennis match between Lieut. G. A. L. Wood and Mrs. Clifford and Omar Rumjahn and Miss R. Rumjahn will be played to-morrow on the U.S.R.C. courts, commencing at 4.30 p.m.

TO-DAY'S FOOTBALL

Only one League football match has been scheduled to take place this afternoon, when Powhatan meet A.S.A. on the Club ground at 2.45 p.m.

SCRIVEN HEADS GOAL-SCORERS WITH TWENTY

The following are the leading League Football goal-scorers to date, eight goals being the necessary qualification:

FIRST DIVISION Lal Shui-wing (South China "A") 12 Fowler (Club) 11 Lee Tack-keo (Eastern) 10 Betts (Navy) 8

Suen Kam-suen (Eastern) 8 Fung King-cheung (S. China "A") 8 Rlerton (Kowloon) 8

SECOND DIVISION McDonald (Royal Scots) 13 Munton (Ordnance) 10 Emberson (Ordnance) 9

Hutchinson's Return Lancashire Fusiliers, fielding only 14 men, gave a gallant performance against a combined Club "A"—Navy fifteen in the preceding game, but were beaten by a dropped-goal, and a penalty goal and a try (10 points) to a goal and a try (8 points) in a dispiriting struggle.

One of the outstanding features was the reappearance of J. Hutchinson, former Club first fifteen stand-off half, who dropped a perfect goal from a difficult angle to give his side a 7-3 interval lead.

John Leeson was at his best, while Wilson displayed a fine burst of speed in the centre, Dalziel, King and Davies were the pick of the Club pack, King being very prominent in the lineouts.

Fusiliers were unfortunate to field only 14 men otherwise they might have won. Their forwards, however, well in the loose, while their backs showed a very fine turn of speed, both their tries being well-merited.

Lomax played a sterling game at the base of the pack and lent valuable support in the loose. Club opened the scoring when King kicked a penalty goal, but Skelton soon placed Fusiliers on level terms with an unconverted try. Just before the interval Hutchinson, picked up a loose ball and dropped a good goal from a difficult angle. In the second half Van Leeuwen culminated a fine back movement with an unconverted try, and just before the end Stubbs dribbled over the Club line for a try which Keane majorised.

'ASPRO' WILL PROTECT YOU

GERMS are no respecters of persons. Wherever you travel you cannot tell the morrow you are likely to catch a cold—or even the 'Flu.' The proved protection is 'ASPRO.' At the slightest sign of sneezing—sore throat—feverishness, etc., take 'ASPRO' according to the directions in the packet. Quick relief is assured, because 'ASPRO' expels the body poisons through the pores of the skin, and, therefore, restores one to normal health by eliminating such poisons and not suppressing them. Furthermore, 'ASPRO' is safe, sure and certain—it neither harms the heart nor stomach, and it conforms to the standard of purity laid down by the British Pharmacopoeia—the guiding authority of the medical profession.

Dear Sirs,
I thank ASPRO Tablets for warding off influenza from my little boy, aged nine, as well as myself, when my wife, who was then as unwell as I, refused to take them, and finished up in hospital with double pneumonia, while we were getting colds, but stopped them with 'ASPRO' and nothing else.
My wife is a staunch advocate for their use now, and takes 'ASPRO' at the first sign of a cold. Wishing 'ASPRO' and their inventor all the good luck they deserve—I am,
Yours faithfully,

6 Hammer Street,
Williamstown.

Dear Sirs,
I thank you for your kind interest in directing me to the certain way to effect a cure to the nasty COLDS with which I had been battling for three weeks, during which time I had tried so many other infallible remedies. On Thursday last I carried out your advice to the letter, and I could hardly believe the fact that on Saturday morning I woke up with no cold left, nor did I cough through the night as I had been in the habit of doing. Although I have used 'ASPRO' with excellent results for years in relieving HEADACHES, I can say positively and with very much appreciation, that your assurance that 'ASPRO' would break up a Cold or the Flu in 24 hours if the directions were properly observed, has been conclusively proven.
Yours faithfully,

SHORT STORY

OSWALD had only two interests — himself and foreign stamps. His widowed mother encouraged him to keep his mind within these limits. They maintained a nice solid barrier between him and such thoughts as girls and marriage.

She need not have feared the possibility of his being vamped, hooked, lured, or fascinated. At the office he had circulated a rumour that he was engaged—merely to obliterate any idea of machinations on the part of the seven typists. At home he refused to meet his sister's friends, and whenever they came he sat up in his bedroom with his stamp album. Over the mantelpiece he had stuck up a large text—SAFETY FIRST AND ALWAYS.

Such was his wary aloofness. Even male acquaintances never got beyond calling him Oswald, in full. True, a man he had known for ten years once said to him: "Oo, aren't you bored stiff with your life?"

But Oswald's reply, "Certainly not, I have my mother and sister and my stamps," had rebuked the familiarity.

"He's a nice pudding," said the man, telling his wife afterwards. "No parson will ever tie the nuptial knots for cautious Oswald."

The man was wrong. In the end, by an impish trick of Fate, Oswald actually dug the grave of his bachelorhood without being aware of it.

A 5-snee Green betrayed him. It was the sole stamp he needed to complete the Ruritanian section of his album, and as he refused to afford to buy one, he pinned his hopes on an exchange or a lucky packet.

Late one night he was gazing at the blank space in the album and murmuring: "I wish I had a 5-snee Green, oh, I wish I had a 5-snee Green."

His mother, glancing at the clock, said: "It's eleven. You ought to be going."

Oswald sighed. His sister was singing at a Masonic affair, and he had promised to meet her at the bus terminus and escort her back the lonely odd-mile to the house. It seemed to Oswald it would be much nicer to go on longing for a 5-snee Green in a comfortable armchair than turn out in to the darkness.

But a promise was a promise. Then it occurred to him that he could save time by taking a foot-path and striking the bus route some distance short of the terminus. He could watch at a bus halt along the road and collect his sister there.

Thus Oswald saved some minutes, which he devoted to yearning for the 5-snee Green. Perhaps that was why the bus arrived and started again before he became fully aware of the fact.

"Good heavens!" he said, peeping hastily after the lighted and receding bulk. In a corner seat, opposite the conductor, he saw his sister in her green coat with the fur collar.

Oswald ran after the bus. "I say!" he shouted. "I say! That lady—ask her to get out, please!"

The conductor heard him, and pulled the bell. Oswald puffed his relief, and dropped to a walk.

But when he reached the girl who had alighted, a horrible panic smote him. She had fair hair, and a green coat with a fur collar, sure enough. But she was not his sister.

The girl stared at him. "What do you mean by calling me off that bus?"

Moisture speckled his forehead. He felt like a little boy who has mischievously banged a knocker and had the door opened on him before he can scuttle away.

"Oh, I'm so sorry, I'm so sorry," he swallowed. "I came to meet my sister, and—she wears a green coat—and—"

"I was expecting my father to meet me," said the girl coldly. "He's about your build, and when I saw a figure waving, and the conductor spoke to me, naturally I got off."

"I'm so sorry!" wailed Oswald. She turned her head, scanning the dark road. "That was the last bus."

"Good Heavens!" he bleated. "Is your house far away?" "About ten minutes' walk."

"I'm so sorry."

"It's all right." But she hesitated, plainly reluctant to go alone.

Oswald gulped. "I say, I'd better see you home."

"Thank you," she said distantly. "But your sister—"

"She must have missed the bus. I suppose somebody's taken her home by car."

The girl looked him up and down. He was immensely glad of her mistrust. If she had smiled at him and been fresh—he shivered at the thought.

"I'd better see you home."

"Very well, thank you."

They walked along in silence. Oswald thanking his lucky stars that nothing worse had come of the affair. If the girl had been a vamp, or if she had turned nasty and sent for a policeman—

Nebulous ideas of such troubles as beset innocents in Hyde Park made him go hot and cold in turns. He was so relieved at escaping the things that might have happened to him, so reassured by her polite aloofness, he could almost have liked her mildly.

Presently she said in her detached way: "If I had met my father he'd be very annoyed. He wouldn't dream of letting me speak to strangers."

"Quite so," said Oswald heartily. Obviously a sensible man, her father.

"No reason for your father to worry," he said aloud. Confidence emboldened him. "As a matter of fact, I hate speaking to strangers myself." Then, afraid they were getting on too well, he concentrated his thoughts on stamps in general and the 5-snee Green in particular.

He did this so successfully he forgot her, and drifted into a half-audible yearning.

"I wish I had a 5-snee Green."

"I beg your pardon."

"I said I wish I had a 5-snee Green. That's a stamp, a Ruritanian stamp."

"You collect stamps?"

"Yes, why? Do you?"

Her coldness melted. "I should think I do! And you're on the lookout for a 5-snee Green? Well, that's funny, because I have two."

At that Oswald became nearly reckless. "Fancy that! A 5-snee Green!"

"Two 5-snee Greens."

He moistened his lips, and said: "I suppose you wouldn't care to part with one? I'd give you a 10-blm. Mandaverian in exchange." And he wondered if she knew it was worth about a quarter of a 5-snee Green.

"Yes, that will suit me," she said graciously.

Oswald expanded. Here was a

"Oh, I'm so sorry... I came to meet my sister, and—she wears a green coat..."

values. "That comes with experience." "I dare say you have a huge collection."

"Pretty big," he answered complacently. She fiddled with the strap of her bag. "If you would care, you could have a look at mine. If there happened to be a few you're after, I wouldn't mind exchanging."

Whatever nutmeg had been dusted over the rice pudding of Oswald's nature asserted itself at that sentence of hers.

"That's ever so nice of you!" "Not a bit. Beginners like myself should be only too glad to give what little help they can to big collectors."

Oswald glowed. She had stopped at a gate over—shadowed by a large lime tree. "This is where I live. I'm much obliged to you for seeing me home."

"A pleasure. I'm sure. And—about those stamps?"

"You can't see them now," she said, smiling slightly.

"Oh, no, of course not. But—"

He waited hopefully.

"It's rather awkward," she pondered a moment. "You see, I haven't told my father I've been speaking to a stranger like this. I know. If you come at eight o'clock to-morrow evening it will be safe. You can examine the stamps and take that 5-nee Green."

"Yes, I understand. Thank you ever so much. Eight o'clock to-morrow. Good-night."

He went away exulting. "A thoroughly sensible creature, for a girl. A 5-nee Green! Fancy! Lucky about her father being like that. I couldn't get too friendly, even if I was silly enough to want to."

Inside the house the girl was ascending a flight of stairs. She pushed open a door, and a girl sitting in bed and smoking exclaimed: "Hullo, 'Millie, you're late."

"Bagged a husband."

"What!"

"That tall young man who lives up in Greenhurst-road with his mother and sister. You know."

"Him! But—"

"He picked me out to-night. Wait a minute, I'll tell you all about it later. Just rack your brains and think of some shop where I can buy a collection of stamps and a thing called a 5-nee Green."

"Gone dotty, my dear?"

"No, I'm fed up with office work and living in digs. He's no sheik, but he has some money. I had to be timid this evening, or I might have scared him away." She smiled prophetically. "But now I've got him stamped and addressed all right."

ONE THING & ANOTHER

A CONTEMPORARY points out that "a man who says 'It's time I had a raise in wages' is one of the 999 out of every thousand who make mistakes in English." He is also one of those whose optimism is quite unfounded.

A FORMER house-breaker told the Liverpool Quarter Sessions the other day that house-breaking was "a more honourable profession than pocket-picking," and that he would never stoop to the latter.

He explained that to pick a man's pocket might mean taking

He may be called upon at any moment to arrest Robin Hood and let men like me. — and Sir — go.

A CONTEMPORARY informs me that "a well-known bibliophile is to be decorated."

I am glad of that. Most of the literary men I know are in dire need of decoration. They are a clumpy-looking bunch. As for journalists, from a cursory glance round this office it is clear that what is urgently needed is a thorough spring cleaning, overhauling, and repairs.

"We demand self-determination."

the bread out of his children's mouths, whereas "if you break into a big house and steal diamonds you are not taking the bread from the children's mouths."

This interesting distinction shows the moral difference between burglary and the more legitimate forms of business enterprise.

In the case of burglary, the man in the big way of business leaves the poor alone.

I often think it must be very embarrassing to be a policeman.

WHAT sort of reception," says the Bishop of Southampton, "would Christ get from the Anglican Church if He returned here to-day?"

Well, I suppose it would say something like this:—

"I'm sure we all—ah—heartily applaud the spirit and intention of the—ah—excellent, if somewhat Utopian, principles which our—ah Friend has outlined with, if I may say so, such—ah—obvious sincerity and conviction. As a basis for an ideal social order they would, no doubt, with certain—ah—modifications, merit our most—ah—earnest consideration."

"It is, however, unfortunately only too clear that the world is not yet ready for acceptance of such—ah—idea standards of behaviour. We all trust that in God's good time a more—ah—propitious occasion for some such—ah—social experiment may present itself. But, in the meantime, until we have some—ah—guarantee that other nations are ready to—ah—co-operate... etc., etc."

Come now—Wouldn't you, Vicar?

First Burglar (to companion during a raid on a chemist's shop): I'll take the cash; you'd better take something for that cold.

A report from France states that there is no intention to alter the construction of the Normandie in order to regain the blue riband.

The correspondent, who invents most of his news, reports that there is, on the contrary, a proposal to lengthen the time of the voyage.

"Our food is so good," said the chef of the vessel, "that passengers are invariably annoyed when the voyage is over. Many of them refuse to leave the ship."

British publicity experts are reported to be hard at work trying to think of a reply to this.

Moving about the countryside during the crisis, I observed the preparations made by owners of country cottages to accommodate London friends and relations who wished to avoid contact with falling bodies. And the words of an old, old song came back to me like the voice of prophecy:—

"There was fifteen of 'em on the parlour floor.

Down in the kitchen there was fifteen more.

Upon the stairs they laid in pairs, On the sofas and the tables, too (ta-ra-ra)

Uncle Jerry he was fair knocked up,

So we stuck 'im in the kennel with the bull-dog pup.

Left in the lurch I roosted on the perch.

With the cock-a-doodle-doodle-doodle-doo."

SEMBLANCE OF ORDER IN REFUGEE SITUATION

The refugee situation in the New Territories which at certain times on Friday and yesterday morning, appeared to be quite out of hand, was, by yesterday afternoon assuming some semblance of order. Willing bands of welfare workers have toiled unceasingly to cater as far as has been possible, to the immediate wants of the scores of thousands of war-stricken Chinese who have flocked across the border in the last 48 hours.

With all the prepared centres packed to capacity and living accommodation in every village and township taxed to the utmost, thousands of wretched souls have wandered for miles in the New Territories attempting to find shelter and food.

These people have gradually been merged into groups of various sizes under the guidance of the welfare workers and strenuous efforts are now being made to feed them all.

FOOD AND FIREWOOD
Truckloads of food and firewood are being sent to each group and many a famished refugee tasted food yesterday for the first time for some days.

Father Ryan, who was in charge of the Kamtin Refugee Camp, Miss Atkins, of St. Stephens Girls College, who has also been taking a prominent part, have so far rendered yeoman service, while Chinese Y.M.C.A. and Adjutant Pong-ting, of the Salvation Army, have also lent valuable aid.

Father Ryan who points out that the need for food and clothing is urgent, said it was impossible to estimate how many refugees had come in.

It was known that 40,000 crossed at Shumchun alone and 20,000 at Shataukok, but thousands more came over at unobserved points.

Defence Lines Near Border

(By N. A. MACKAY)
The Chinese defence forces have not entirely abandoned their resistance. That I discovered in a visit to Shataukok late yesterday afternoon.

Traversing the border road for about a quarter of a mile from Shataukok, I saw, from a place of vantage on a small hillock overlooking the Shataukok Valley, the preparations that were being made for a "last-ditch" stand a bare 50 yards from the border.

Extended over a front of not more than half a mile, in positions facing the mountains, on the other side of which an engagement was reported to be in progress, were isolated sections armed with light automatics.

Headquarters appeared to be in a small farmhouse, scarcely a stone's throw from the border. Number of troops manning the position, I estimated to be not more than 200. The terrain appeared to me to be ideal for a defensive action. Two water-courses, well protected with bushes and about eight feet deep, ran parallel to each other, parallel to the border and were, in effect, a natural defence system with good lines of communication.

I judge that determined troops could hold these positions for some considerable time and could make the attacking forces pay very dearly for every inch gained. There is no cover of any description for at least a mile from the furthest Chinese outpost.

lying in the doorway. I picked it up. "Shrapnel," said the corporal laconically. "Must have been a direct hit." He lifted the apron. "Blimey! Fair and square on the corner-post. Made a mess of our sandbags, too."

We stood tense for the next. It exploded within a yard of the other, wrecking the post's water-tank. The signaller rattled the telephone. "Line cut," he said shortly.

Somebody laughed. "No chance of ordering a pint."

More shells fell just past the little hollow that sheltered the tents of the police post.

HE RISKED DEATH FOR—

When the shelling at Shumchun was at its height yesterday, a coolie was observed halfway across the Shumchun bridge, to turn round and bolt back to what appeared certain death.

Ten minutes later he came running back. Panting, he sought shelter in the gully by Observation Post Number Nine. Walking over to him, we saw that he was busily engaged in counting a bundle of banknotes! There were about fifty—all of ten cent denomination!

JAP. VERSION OF PASSOVER

THE JAPANESE HAVE EVIDENTLY BEEN READING THE BIBLE!

Apparently they like the story of the Passover!

Included among the shower of leaflets which fell from their planes prior to the artillery bombardment of Shumchun, were forms on which were prominently displayed the emblem of the Rising Sun.

"Place these on your doors," they said in effect, "and our shells, and our bombs, and our bayonets, will pass you by!"

M. C. C.

Bloomfontein, Yesterday.
The M.C.C. have started off in great style in their match against the Orange Free State.

Batting first the home side were all out for only 125 runs.

FILIPINO BOXER —OUTPOINTED— IN TITLE BOUT

New York, Yesterday.
Henry Armstrong, holder of both the world's light and welterweight boxing championships, outpointed Cefelino Garcia, of the Philippines, in a 15-round contest here last night for the welterweight title.

Armstrong weighed in at 134 pounds and Garcia at 146½ pounds. — Reuter.

GOLD PRICE AT PEAK

London, Yesterday.
The official price of bar gold in London reached an all-time record to-day when it was fixed at 150/- an ounce, representing an advance of 2/0½d. on the week.

The upward trend of gold primarily results from the strength of the United States dollar, for which a large demand exists on the foreign exchange market from the Continent.

This demand is based partly on international political fears and partly on the belief that the sterling-dollar rate of exchange will be allowed to fall to the neighbourhood of 4.50. — Reuter.

CIVIL SERVICE ALLIANCE

London, Yesterday.
Foundation of a new organisation of state employees, which will comprise over 100,000 members and will therefore be the largest of its kind in Great Britain, was announced to-day at a conference here.

Attending the conference were delegates representing the Civil Service Clerical Association, the Ministry of Labour Staff Association, the Inland Revenue Staff Federation and the County Court Officers Association.

The new organisation, which will be known as the Civil Service Alliance, will commence its activities on January 1 next. — Trans-Ocean.

SHEFFIELD SHIELD CRICKET

Melbourne, Yesterday.
Queensland, at the end of the second day's play in the Sheffield Shield match with New South Wales, the holders, stand in a very strong position.

After 223 runs on the board for the loss of four wickets yesterday, Queensland to-day added a further 207 runs for the loss of another four wickets.

When stumps were drawn to-day they had scored 495 for 8 wickets. New South Wales have not yet batted. — Reuter.

SHANGHAI BOXER WINS AGAIN

San Francisco, Yesterday.
Andre Shelaef, the youthful Russian boxer from Shanghai, last night beat Johnny Fasano, by a technical knock-out in the sixth round of a 10-round bout.

Shelaef was making his third appearance in the United States, having won another fight and drawing his first encounter with Fasano. — Reuter.

Madame DEFARGE

(BY VICTOR S. MAMAK)

"I Demand the life of that aristocrat Evermond, citizens of France, I demand it."

If we may believe, and we have no reason to disbelieve, in the immortal story of the "Tale of Two Cities" written by Charles Dickens, we find a character of a vengeful woman who has no second in the whole world. That character is Madame Defarge who nourished a moral cancer in her heart for thirty-two years, and planned to avenge her wrongs with a calmness and patience almost incredible.

It was the time when to be born poor was a crime; when men prayed that their women might be barren and their miserable seed die out; when poverty was not a matter of pity but of shame and dishonour; when starving people were heavily taxed to provide for the aristocrats.

Madame Defarge belonged to that period and she had good cause to hate the Evermonds and all the other Aristocrats. She had a sister—young and beautiful—married to a sick and poor man. The unfortunate girl attracted the fancy of one of the Evermonds, who forcibly got the poor creature to his chambers and disgraced her. The brother of the girl, possessing a very high sense of honour, followed his sister, sword in hand, to save her from the voluptuous wolf. But—he was no match against the skillful swordsmanship of the powerful rich and fell.

The girl who lost both her honour and a loving brother collapsed a week later. From that thing. A large hand heavily ringed, a steady face, strong features and great composure of manner.

It is not necessary that a woman with heavy broad features must play this part. With make-up the features can be easily altered. Miss Couzens' features are naturally slim yet she appears to possess a strong and broad face with fat cheeks in the make-up picture. The trick is done by highlighting the cheek bones and the chin.

First of all the nose is formed with putty, the quantity of putty depending on the size of the nose.

For foundation grease paint use No. 5 in Max Factor's.

Note the puffy effect of the eyes. This effect is created with a dark shadow (No. 2 lining colour) blended immediately under the lower lid. This is highlighted with No. 11 (yellow), and then the lower edge of the highlight is shadowed. The upper lid should be treated in the same manner to produce this effect.

This make-up is not difficult if carried out with patience.

Miss Couzens as Madame Defarge.

time Madame Defarge, although young in years, swore vengeance and "Death to Evermonds and all their creed" became her motto.

For thirty two years she knitted the names of all the aristocrats in France who were eventually executed soon after the triumph of the revolutionaries in 1789. She had a wine shop where meetings were secretly held. When she wore a couple of roses in her head-dress, it was an indication that spies were around and all was not safe. Even after denouncing the last of the Evermonds, who was eventually saved, she endeavoured to kill the six-year old child of Charles Evermond, to completely wipe out the name she so desperately hated. At last defeated in the attempt and killed by the English nurse of the child Evermond, Madame Defarge joined her dead sister and brother.

The character is very interesting for make-up.

She is described as a stout woman with a watchful eye that seldom seemed to look at any-

The Week's Photography

SUBJECT:
'COMEDY PHOTOS'

"LIDO". By C. K. Pong.

"BANK". By Yu Yuen.

BUY ADVERTISED CAMERAS

MR. DOOLEY, a philosopher of earlier years, said: "O! can be made to believe anything if you 'fill' it to me often enough." I quote this gentleman's belief, for lack of a more appropriate one at the moment, with a view to ensuring that sufficient pictures will be forthcoming for inclusion in the Christmas issue due to appear on December 18. As you may have noted from my remarks last week the December competition will have for subject "COMEDY PHOTOGRAPHS", and, as it is proposed to feature more pictures than usual on this page, I hope those of you who have suitable entries, will send them in early. If you can let me have them by December 12, I shall be all the better pleased.

Judging by some of the entries received this past week it would seem as if the camera had been pointed up for the sheer pleasure of doing so and with scant regard for the effect it was likely to produce. One of the points to remember in taking what may be regarded as unusual angle pictures is whether the viewpoint gives an interesting and pleasant version of the subject.

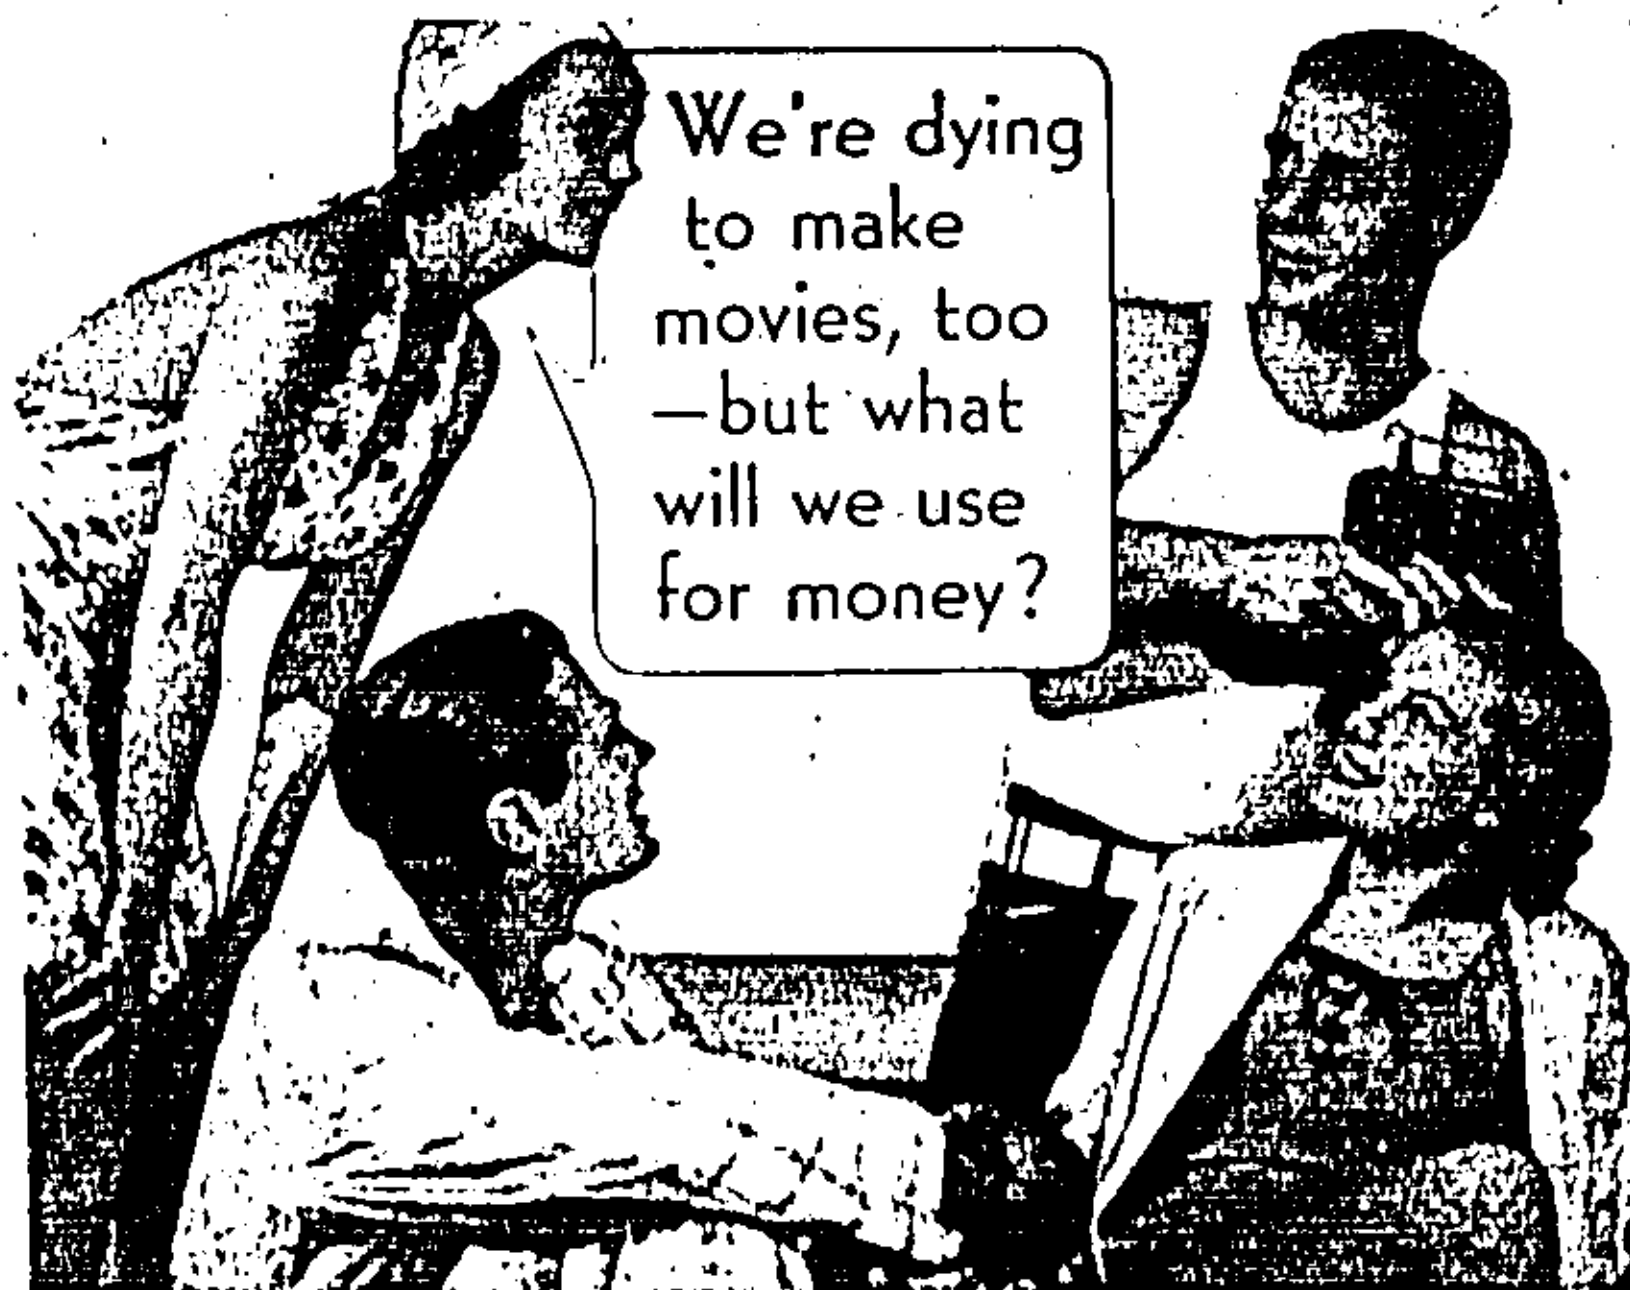

The framing of pictures has also come to the fore with the past week's entries. Sometimes architectural details have been used, sometimes Nature has provided one, and as is usually the case those by Nature have produced the better effect.

In two entries received this week trees have been used as frames, and in Mr. Yuen's "Shanghai Bank" have been used to the best advantage. The main subject is well-chosen and well-placed, but I should have preferred a somewhat lighter rendering of the sky, which is rather on the dark side.

Besides Mr. C. K. Pong's "Lido", however, this particular fault appears negligible indeed. I am quite sure this subject would have lost nothing by a much reduced depth of printing. Both the lights and the shadows are over-accentuated and an impression of harshness of contrast conveyed. Two disturbing elements in this picture are (1) the line at the right-hand side and (2) the impression that the tower is falling over.

Money's no obstacle — CINE-KODAK EIGHT was designed to make movies that fit everybody's pocketbook.

Those people down the road. Seems as though every time you see them, they're making home movies. Great sport, all right, but the cost.

That needn't stop you. Make your movies as thousands of other people are making them—with Cine-Kodak Eight, a new-type movie camera that was specially designed to put home movies on a low-cost basis.

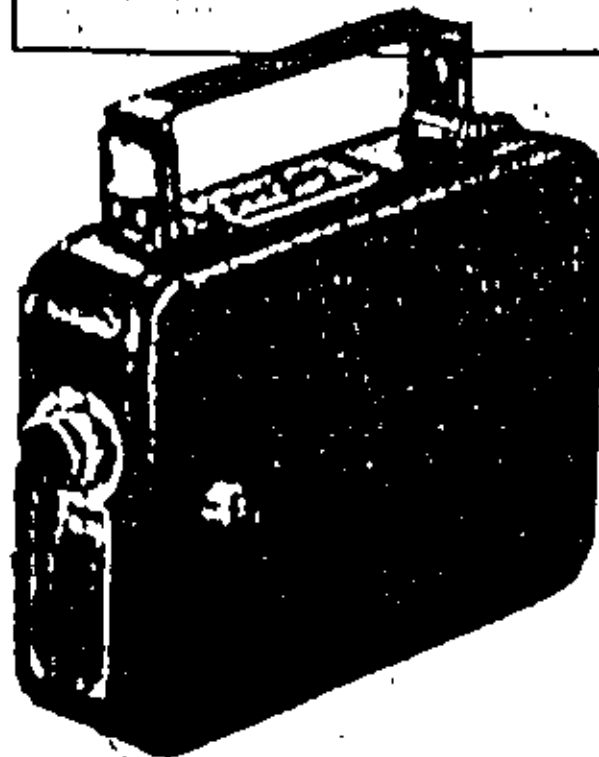

A 25-foot roll of black-and-white film for Cine-Kodak Eight runs as long on the screen as 100 feet of amateur standard home movie film—gives you 20 to 30 movie scenes, each as long as the average scene in the newsreels.

FULL COLOUR WITH KODACHROME

Load the Eight with the remarkable new Kodachrome Film, and you can make movies in colour—gorgeous full colour. Simple to make as black-and-white, and the cost is just a few cents more a scene. No extra equipment is needed. The colour is in the film. See movies in black-and-white and in full-colour Kodachrome at your dealer's or at

COLONY'S BEST-DRESSED

"I know, Mrs. Wills. Every mother has the same trouble with children sooner or later.

"I've had a lot of experience and my advice is—give 'California Syrup of Figs.' There's nothing like it for keeping the stomach and bowels in good order. It's so natural yet so sure. It acts on the bowels naturally and does not create a habit.

"So many doctors recommend it and give it to their own children that I am sure it's the best, and you need to be sure when it is a question of the children's medicine, Mrs. Wills.

"I do know mothers who experiment with cheap and drastic preparations. They don't realize that they're courting danger.

"Send to the drug store for a bottle of 'California Syrup of Figs' now and give Joan a dose at bedtime. She'll be as bright as a lark in the morning. Give it to her regularly once a week and she'll have no more trouble with constipation.

"Be sure to get the genuine 'California Syrup of Figs.'

NATURE'S OWN LAXATIVE

THIS week of bright sunshine and cool breezes has brought out in the open, on some of the Colony's smartest women, many interesting and artfully assembled costumes. To give you a brief idea of what the autumn season is bringing forth is this little resume of the week's smartest fashions in and around Pedder Street:

At the Hongkong Hotel on Monday the woman in the gray velveteen suit, three-piece and stunning, wearing with it fuschia suede accessories.

Strolling along Queen's Road: the young lady in the nubby green tweed casual suit with a purple silk jersey blouse, tall green felt hat and purple alligator shoes.

Visiting at a Peak mansion, the matron in the stone blue costume suit with a Kolinsky scarf. And, the woman in the black woolen jacket suit with a sunset rose jumper, antelope hat with tiny red feathers in it.

Taking tea on the terrace at the Gloucester, Wednesday, the American visitor in a grey tailleur, low heeled grey suede pumps, grey silk shirt, and grey felt hat

GOLD AND BLACK LAME.—For restaurant dining this stunning street length frock in pleated gold and black lame is worn with a tiny tricorn of black felt, with a Chantilly type black lace veil.

(Henry Heath) with a scarlet quill.

Her companion in a brown silk jersey dress and beaver cape with a bright green hat.

Shopping on Des Voeux Road, the pretty woman (Thirtyish) wearing a teal blue woolen dress and teal blue felt hat. Another in a plaid suit with a green shirt, green hat with red quill and low heeled alligator shoes in red.

Dancing at the "Gripps" the other night, the delightful blonde in a black long sleeved dinner dress with four-inch wide cuffs of turquoise beading to match the girdle on her frock. The sophisticate in a backless, strapless cloth of gold, and her mother? in grey lace with a cherry red velvet wrap collared in grey fox.

BEAUTY AT HOME

ONCE we had a letter from a woman who said she had heard that standing on the head was beautifying, but didn't we think it was a little extreme? It seems she'd tried it and cracked her wardrobe mirror in her brave attempt!

Standing on the head does seem rather drastic. But I do think, however, that as a woman grows older, and her skin begins to lose the firmness and freshness of its first youth, it must have something more than cleansing, protection and lubrication. What it really needs, increasingly, is stimulation—or toning. And this can be managed in two ways, either by manipulation (hand or mechanical device) or by the use of stimulating preparations. Both methods are accepted by skin specialists, and both are used by trained assistants in beauty salons.

When you add stimulation to cleansing, lubricating and protecting, you get what is popularly known as the facial. Facials vary enormously in methods and in preparations used, but all of them—professional or amateur—have the same aim—to uplift, stimulate and recondition the face.

1. Use palms of the hands to massage the jaw line....

2. "Walk" your fingertips up the nose-to-mouth lines....

Facials are good because they give permanent benefit, and also produce that quick glamorous glow that helps to carry the face from a hard day through a social evening.

Any woman who has enjoyed the luxurious benefit of a good facial in a beauty salon will probably agree that it's a very pleasant and satisfactory experience. I do find, however, that many women are afraid of home facials, because they are nervous about their ability to learn the necessary hand movements.

The proper massage technique, shown in the sketches here, is as follows: Bind back hair and smooth cream over throat and face. 1. Start at the base of the throat with a vigorous upward circulatory movement. Use palms of the hands to massage the jaw line, starting at the tip of the chin and working up and out to the ears. 2. "Walk" your fingertips up the nose-to-mouth lines, and progress up and out to the temples.

3. Circle each eye gently with a finger-tip—outward above the eye, in underneath.

4. Use strong upward movements between the eyebrows....

3. Circle each eye gently with a finger-tip—outward above the eye, in underneath. 4. Use strong upward movements of the finger-tips up between the eyebrows and out over each eye. If possible, leave the cream on the face for five or ten minutes—lie down, take a bath or relax in an easy chair. Remove cream with tissues. Squeeze out a pad of cotton-wool in skin tonic or cold water and pat the face, slapping vigorously on the neck and under the chin. Pat gently around the eyes. Dry the skin, and smooth on a little only cream.

Knit into the back of the stitches. Work in a rib of 1 plain, 1 purl for 3½ inches.

Change to No. 10 needles.

1st row: Knit to last 6 stitches, purl 1, knit 1 to end.

2nd row: (Purl 1, knit 1) 3 times, purl to end.

Repeat these 2 rows 4 times more.

11th row: Increase in 1st stitch, knit to last 8 stitches, knit 2 together, * purl 1, knit 1, repeat from * to end.

12th row: The same as the 2nd row.

Repeat last 2 rows until 18 stitches have been decreased inside the border stitches, only increasing at the beginning of the knit rows every seventh row, then decrease inside the border stitches every fourth row.

Continue to increase at the side edge every seventh row until 9 stitches have been increased.

When work measures 14 inches, shape armholes.

Cast off 9 stitches at the beginning of the next row at side edge, decrease 1 stitch every alternate row 8 times, work even at armhole edge, at the same time decreasing 1 stitch every fourth row at front edge until 42 stitches remain.

Work on without further shaping until the armhole measures 8 inches.

Shape shoulder. Cast off 7 stitches at the beginning of the next 5 rows at armhole edge, work on the remaining 7 ribbed stitches for 2 inches, leave these stitches on a piece of wool.

RIGHT FRONT: Follow the instructions for the left front, reversing the increases and decreases.

BACK: With No. 11 needles, cast on 120 stitches.

Knit into the back of the stitches.

Work in a rib of 1 plain, 1 purl for 3½ inches.

Change to No. 10 needles and stocking-stitch.

Work 10 rows.

Increase 1 stitch each end of the needle in the next row and every seventh row until there are 138 stitches.

Work even in stocking-stitch until back measures 14 inches.

Shape armholes.

Cast off 8 stitches at the beginning of the next 2 rows, decrease 1 stitch each end of the needle every alternate row 7 times.

Work even until armhole measures 8 inches.

Shape shoulders.

Cast off 7 stitches at the beginning of the next 10 rows, cast off remaining stitches.

SLEEVES: With No. 11 needles, cast on 70 stitches.

Knit into the back of the stitches.

Work in a rib of 1 plain, 1 purl for 4 inches.

Change to No. 10 needles and stocking-stitch.

Increase 1 stitch each end of the needle every eighth row until there are 98 stitches.

Work even until sleeve measures 20 inches above the ribbing.

Cast off 7 stitches at the beginning of the next 2 rows, cast off 2 stitches every row until 30 stitches remain. Cast off.

NAME:
ADDRESS:
4APB6

At nine o'clock on the morning of August 3rd, 1916, a small crowd was standing outside the gates of Pentonville Prison. It was swelteringly hot, and everyone—men and women alike—wore hats to protect them from the sun.

But as the prison bell began to toll in deep, hollow tones, the heads were bared and a murmur ran through the crowd. Presently a dark-coated warder pinned a sheet of paper to the prison gates.

Sir Roger Casement, Knight, was dead—executed for High Treason!

What a wealth of tragedy and quivering, pulsating adventure lies behind that simple statement—"executed for High Treason."

Roger Casement was born a fervently patriotic Irishman, a brilliantly clever one, too, for, while still young, he worked his way to the top of the Colonial Civil Service, and, as a reward for his efforts, was knighted by the late King George.

But British treatment of Ireland made him long for Home Rule, for complete independence. Thus it was that, when the war broke out, Roger Casement could not resist the temptation to betray Britain to the Kaiser—in return for the promise of "Ireland for the Irish!"

His plot was one of the most daring and picturesque in history, for Roger Casement tried to invade Ireland with a single submarine!

ROGER CASEMENT

(By JOHN PEEL)

Germany, he planned, was to send arms and ammunition to Ireland; the rebels were to unite; and, at the critical moment, he himself was to be landed from a submarine to lead his men against the English, ultimately allowing Germany to use the country as a base for action against the Allies!

Yet, as is so often the case, one slip ruined the enterprise and spelt death for the misguided conspirator—the vessel containing the arms was captured, after some of the arms had been thrown overboard! Sir Roger, unaware that his plans had already miscarried, went ahead with his "invasion" of Ireland.

On the night of Good Friday, 1916, a German submarine with the arch-rebel aboard hove to off the Irish coast; and as the expected ferry failed to arrive, Casement rowed for the shore in an open boat.

But the Fates were against him. A storm sprang up, the dinghy capsized, and Casement had to swim ashore, where he took refuge in a ruined castle.

In the meantime some arms from the gun-running vessel had been washed ashore—and when the villagers found a little girl playing with them their suspicions were aroused.

And so the local policeman—all unconscious that he was making history—challenged the ragged fellow whom he happened to see crouching in the dim recesses of the derelict castle. "Who are you?" he demanded.

"I am a tourist. My name is Richard Morton, and I live at Denham, Bucks."

And with that lie Sir Roger Casement, as it were, sealed his own death warrant. For had he given his real name, it was one so universally respected that the constable would not have dreamed of taking him into custody.

As it was, he was taken into a custody from which he was never to escape, for the British authorities had long regarded him as a spy and were only too glad to have him safe behind prison bars.

Despite a brilliantly subtle piece of legal quibbling as to the technical definition of treason, his counsel failed to save him at his trial. And so, on that sunny morning

In August, Roger Casement, stripped of his honours, paid for the just but terrible punishment which wartime justice metes out to traitors.

I Follow The Fleet

By A Naval Officer's Wife

THE girl at the cocktail party smiled adorably and said, "It must be so romantic to be a naval officer's wife." She gazed with enormous blue eyes at the nearest man in uniform, obviously visioning herself clasped to his manly bosom with the brass buttons in exotic parts.

I put down my glass, informed her kindly that he was my husband, but the man hiding behind him was not married, and retired to a corner to consider this romantic aspect. The blue-eyed girl was not the first person to remark on the idyllic life led by naval officers' wives, but following the fleet is a peculiar occupation. You can't, really, call it terribly romantic. It gives one, after a few years, a slightly jaundiced view of travel and a positively uncanny ability to look after oneself. One develops, for instance, an almost savage technique in dealing with steamship companies and chief stewards. Also, a peculiar gift for finding flats, houses, and rooms in what appear at first sight to be howling deserts, and an uncanny financial genius that enables one to find the fare to the new station to which one's husband has been so suddenly transferred.

PORTSMOUTH, when I first went there, was drenched with rain, grey, salty, indescribably dismal, with wet gusts of wind howling round the deserted streets, yet within four hours I had acquired a furnished flat, a maid, and a garage for the car. (Most of my friends, incidentally, could have done it in two.) There were also a cat, which was included in the furnishings, the last tenant's electric light bill, and mice in the kitchen, but I didn't find those out till the next morning.

The day after that my husband's ship came back from the Mediterranean, we gave a housewarming cocktail party for twenty people, and felt ourselves two of the oldest inhabitants. The following week, when I had finished purchasing my winter wardrobe (seven months in Malta doesn't exactly fit one out for an English winter), and was becoming pleasantly resigned to the chill greyness of Portsmouth in November, my husband's ship left Trinidad.

Meekly I packed away my new clothes with mothballs, bullied my bank manager about the little matter of an overdraft, and booked my passage by a small French steamship for Port-of-Spain. All of which may appear slightly unsettling to the casual observer, but when one has spent about seven years in more or less perpetual packing and unpacking, one feels that something is wrong when one spends more than six months in one place. I think seven and a half is my record. Housekeeping in the West Indies was a dream. I know one girl who had a three-roomed flat and a garden, and kept three maids for just over a pound a week. Oysters at fourpence a dozen, rum at a dollar a bottle, tennis, bathing, dancing—Trinidad was fun. I was sorry to leave, but the ship sailed, and the wives trailed after it, packing, unpacking, arguing with shipping agents, shutting up flats and houses, saying goodbye to friends we'll never see again, beginning to wonder who will be in Malta when we get there, cabling for accommodation, hoping against hope that the houses we had last time will be vacant. . . . Wondering when we'll see our husbands again. . . .

I have never met anyone quite so unlucky as a naval wife. I knew in Malta. She had been married only five months, and had been with her husband for a fortnight. The rest of the time she had spent in unavailing pursuit of the man. Scarlet fever stranded her for six weeks in Marseilles, a broken leg prevented her from seeing him at Alexandria; at Cyprus his ship was in quarantine for measles or something equally childish, and while she was waiting for him at Malta the Italo-Abyssinian war broke out, and she was sent back to England. She had begun to regard him as some kind of Holy Grail by the time they met at Portsmouth, and they had spent a small fortune on cablegrams. She used to send him photographs of herself by every third mail, so that he should not forget what she looked like.

After Malta, Chatham; after Chatham, Plymouth; after Plymouth, across the Atlantic again to Bermuda. Amazing Bermuda. The rich Americans live at one end of the island and the Navy and its wives at the other. As no private cars are allowed on the island, because of the coral formation, and horses and carriages are rather prohibitively priced, we all have bicycles. Whenever we went to parties (and there were a lot in Bermuda) we had to bicycle. In evening dress this is distinctly difficult, as it is invariably raining and blowing a young gale on the nights you want to go out.

MILL GIRLS IN THE LAND OF THE....

IN Japan the pressure of men on the earth has worn through to the iron rock, there is nothing but the volcanoes and the volcanic wastes that men have not handled, and there is no getting away from men anywhere. No one holds of advantage over the land is ignored: a man will give months of the most painful labour to the construction of heavy walls holding no more earth than would support a patch of geraniums in another country. Nothing is thrown away, nothing let go wild, nothing wasted.

The poverty of Japanese agriculture creates a situation in which a Japanese farm girl in her teens will do factory work for anything at all. The new Dai Nippon mill outside Osaka may be taken as an example of the best Japan offers her. It has an air suggestive of a cross between a school and an orphanage. The corridors of soft waxed wood and the mats suggest school. The new girls fresh from the farms, carrying their clothes in bundles and staring like children lost in a dream, are the reminders of misery. Most of the 1500 girls are 17 or 18; the youngest are 13. They all dress alike, in middy suits of a dismal blue and black stockings and sneakers. They are incredibly small. Their legs are thickly short, and their breasts uneventful.

Nothing about them, as the early morning shift marches back to its dormitories at two in the afternoon to prepare for afternoon rest and regulated exercise and evening classes and early bed, suggests what "girl" suggests in every language. And then suddenly, ten minutes later, the whole scene has changed. They have come out of their 15-mat rooms and are kneeling bare-footed in the corridors combing the lint from their heavy black hair. The picture becomes young and attractive. It remains school-like through the huge dining room where 150 tables stand scrubbed and neat, each with its ten boxes of chopsticks, and through the clean, fish-smelling kitchen, where lunch is fish and pickles and rice, and supper is bean-paste and pickles and rice, and there is no limit to the rice. But at the door of the bathroom it is no longer like any American school. Here in a vast rectangular fishpond of scalding water the breastless maidens, their bodies scrubbed pink on the floor alongside, may sit by the twenties and fifties discussing the interests of their strangely public lives.

They are not exciting lives. But neither are they hard by Japanese standards. Wages over the average stay of 19 months are 21 cents a day. The company provides free medical attention and schooling (courses in home-making and motherhood) and carries about half the cost of the food. A girl who stays three years may expect to save, with bonuses, some $100.

The lot of the textile workers in the best mills, then, cannot be called insupportable. Physically the girls in the first-class mills are probably better off than women workers in comparable establishments in certain Western countries. Whether the girls themselves like it is another question. About one third of them run away during the first year. And one of the songs sung in the mill baths announces:

Another factory appears to be paradise.
But the one you are in is hell.

SHOULD HUSBANDS AND WIVES HAVE SEPARATE FRIENDS?

I'm just going out for an hour, dear. I want to see some of the boys

Oh Jim, I wish you didn't go out so often in the evenings. I see so little of you these days

2 EVENINGS LATER

Sorry I can't be home for dinner darling - I've got to attend that Sports Club Committee tonight. I'll have a bite in town.

NEXT MORNING

I know it's all right Jim having his own friends, Mother. It's the modern idea, but it does worry me - I see so little of him

These modern theories are all very well Ann; but when I was young we'd say that a man who stayed out in the evenings usually had a dull, lifeless wife at home

THEN ANN READ A MAGAZINE ARTICLE - IT SAID:

"Too many wives feel constantly tired, listless and 'nervy.' This tells on their looks frightfully."

HEAVENS, THAT'S ME! I must see a doctor about myself

AT THE DOCTOR'S

You say you always wake tired, and feel washed out and dull, that's bound to tell on your looks. Your trouble is Night Starvation. My advice is, Horlicks at bedtime

SO HORLICKS EVERY NIGHT

AND WHAT AN IMPROVEMENT IN HOW ANN FELT AND LOOKED

6 WEEKS LATER

My goodness, the nicest place in the world is here with you, Ann, by the fireside!

Darling Jim!

THINKS: I'm glad I got rid of my tiredness thanks to Horlicks

Do you wake tired every morning? Look tired? Feel nervy?

TAKE HORLICKS - a hot cupful every night at bedtime will end that dreadful tiredness, bring the sparkle back to your face and restore your attractive liveliness and gaiety once more.
